The President of the United States to Be Arraigned as a Swindler.

General Pleasonton Interviewed in Regard to the Tender of Patronage to Senator Schurz.

Partial List of the Defalcations Under the Grant Administration.

What Sen. Loan Says as to the Record of Carl Schurz.

GRANT A SWINDLER.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Ex-Mayor Bowen, of Washington, writes, under date of Washington, July 18, as follows to George Watkins, of Scipio, N. Y., declaring the President wronged him out of $38,000 in a business transaction:

"MY DEAR SIR: You are right in stating that I know something of General Grant's business qualifications, as well as his character for honor, honesty, and truth. I had a business transaction with him, in which he cheated me out of $38,000 with a coolness and deliberation that would do credit to any blackleg, as I stand ready to prove by Grant's letter and the original contract in my possession. I intend to prosecute Grant before our Courts, and have made arrangements to commence a suit against him at the next term, when the whole matter will be shown up to the world. This letter is only an index to Grant's private character. He is a miserly, sordid man, and will resort to anything—invasion or evasion of law and justice, or anything else that an honorable person would despise—to put money in his pocket. His habits are of the worst possible kind, and his associates of the lowest order. Indeed, his instincts are low and vulgar, and he is never so well satisfied as when in company with horse jockeys, smoking cigars, drinking whiskey, and 'talking horse.' Your friend, &c., B. J. BOWEN."

PLEASONTON INTERVIEWED.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, July 27.—A Tribune reporter called upon General Alfred Pleasonton, and obtained the following statement:

About two weeks after entering upon the duties of the office of Comissioner of Internal Revenue at Washington, in January, 1871, General Pleasonton had an interview with President Grant. In the course of the conversation the President introduced the Santo Domingo question, and, remarking that he understood that Senator Schurz was opposed to the Treaty, asked General Pleasonton to see Senator Schurz, and tell him that if he would call at the White House the President would be able to place the Santo Domingo matter in a satisfactory light, and could remove his objections to the scheme. In further conversation with the President, General Pleasonton was led to understand that the President would, in exchange for Senator Schurz's support of the Santo Domingo treaty, accord him a share of public patronage. General Pleasonton says his impressions on this point are very distinct and unmistakable. Thus authorized, General Pleasonton saw Senator Schurz and informed him of the President's wish to see him. Senator Schurz replied that he would call at any time he might designate for an interview. Pleasonton saw the President next day, and informed him of the Senator's reply, at which he expressed his gratification, and said that he would send for Senator Schurz in a few days. The interview was not till some weeks later. When it seemed to be assured that Senator Schurz oppose the Treaty, General Pleasonton received a memorandum slip from the President directing the removal of Senator Schurz's brother-in-law, Edmund Jussen, from the office of Collector of Internal Revenue at Chicago at once. The unusual nature of this imperative removal attracted General Pleasonton's attention, and he asked the President to suspend action for some weeks; but the President said that he regretted that he could not do so, as he had promised to remove the man at once. A new appointment was made upon the recommendation of Senator Logan and Congressman Farnsworth. This satisfied General Pleasonton with the belief that political patronage was considered of more importance at that time than the immediate necessities of the public service. Subsequently, and shortly before General Pleasonton's departure for Europe, Senator Schurz addressed him a letter, asking for his recollections and impressions of the conversation in which the President desired him to call upon the Senator and open negotiations, as mentioned. General Pleasonton responded in the letter which Senator Schurz has made public.

HARTRANFT TO BE THROWN OVERBOARD IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Arrangements have been quietly making, among shrewd Pennsylvania politicians, for several days, to persuade the Republican State Committee to accept from General Hartranft his proffered withdrawal from the contest for Governor, and to place upon the ticket, not only a capable and experienced man, but a man of character, of honesty and of prominence. It is understood that a majority of those moving in the matter are favorable to Judge Schofield, who has represented a district in that State for ten years, and who has just been nominated for Congressman-at-Large. It is said that even Cameron and his friends, no longer hoping to succeed with Hartranft, will accept Schofield, while Forney is eager for the change.

LIST OF DEFALCATIONS UNDER GRANT.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Three columns of the Tribune are occupied to-day, by a partial list of defaulting Government officers under Grant. The list was compiled merely from newspaper files, and, of course, is very incomplete. The total of these admitted frauds is as follows: Internal Revenue, $1,392,903; Pensions, $278,000; Post Office, $342,000; Treasury, $90,500; State Department, $500; Department of Justice, $122,000; Customs, $147,000; Navy, $476,883; War, $445,406. Total, $3,194,247.

LIBERAL CONVENTIONS IN IOWA.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

DES MOINES, July 27.—The Polk County Liberal Republicans held a County Convention in this city to-day, to select delegates to the Liberal State Convention, to be held in this city on Thursday next. Fourteen delegates were selected, and the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Administration now in power has, by its policy, violated the confidence of the people against whom all the Presidents declared in his message he would have no policy to enforce; has openly disregarded and violated the law and the provisions of the Constitution; has attempted to supplant civil by military rule and subjected the Republican party and official patronage to personal and purely mercenary partisan purposes; has surrendered the control of the Government into the hands of ambitious, selfish, and corrupt politicians, and has, by his entire official career, forfeited the highest trust conferred upon him by the people as Chief Executive of our Nation, and shown himself unworthy of the support and confidence of the honest and patriotic members of the Republican party; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we reaffirm the wise and patriotic principles of the platform adopted by the Cincinnati Convention, and pledge our earnest support to the nominees of that great National Convention,—Horace Greeley and B. Gratz Brown,—for President and Vice President of the United States.

Resolved, That we invite and will cordially welcome the co-operation of all persons, regardless of previous political affiliations, race, color, or condition, who are in favor of reform, reunion, and reconciliation, and an honest administration of our Government.

The Polk County Democrats also held a County Convention here to-day, and selected sixteen delegates to the Democratic State Convention, which to be held in this city August 1, the same day the Liberal State Convention is to be held. Great preparations are being made by the Liberal Republicans and Democrats to make the approaching State Conventions large and harmonious.

SENATORIAL CONVENTION IN THE THIRTY-EIGHTH ILLINOIS DISTRICT.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

JACKSONVILLE, Ill., July 27.—The Democratic Convention of the Thirty-eighth Senatorial District was held to day at Naples, Hon. W. R. Archer, of Pike County, was nominated for Senator, and Hon. Henry Dresser, of Scott County, and Hon. M. Lorie, of Calhoun County, for Representatives. The proceedings of the Convention were harmonious, and the nominations are entirely satisfactory.

LIBERAL MEETING AT MISHAWAKA, IND.—THE GERMAN REPUBLICANS FOR GREELEY.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

MISHAWAKA, Ind., July 27.—A large and enthusiastic Liberal meeting of Germans and Americans was held here to-night. The crowd far exceeded that assembled to hear Jasper Packard, Radical candidate for Congressman, last Thursday evening. Hon. J. B. Stoll, Democratic candidate for Auditor of State, and Hon. J. A. Henricks, Liberal candidate for Congressman from the Eleventh District, addressed the meeting.

There are only two Grant men amongst the large German population of Mishawaka; and the large Radical majority in this city will be overcome in October.

LIBERAL RALLY AT LOGANSPORT, IND.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

LOGANSPORT, Ind., July 27.—Colonel J. P. Gray, Liberal Republican, addressed a large and enthusiastic meeting here last night. The speech was a powerful review of the Administration, and was replete with indisputable facts and arguments.

BENJAMIN F. LOAN ON THE RECORD OF CARL SCHURZ.

ST. LOUIS, July 27.—It having been repeatedly asserted, here and elsewhere, and several times denied, that General Schurz, previous to his election as United States Senator, made a distinct pledge that he would stand by and support the Republican party if elected to the Senate, the Staats Zeitung, of this city, publishes a letter from Benjamin F. Loan, Schurz's Radical competitor in that contest, in which he reviews the situation of affairs at that time, and sums up declaring that according to his recollection, General Schurz, in a speech at Jefferson City during the Senatorial contest, utterly denied all sympathy with those who favor rebel enfranchisement, repudiated the action of those Republican papers which undertook to emphatic language asserted his entire devotion to the most ultra doctrines of the Radicals, and pledged his faithful support to them.

NO MATINEE AT CHAPPAQUA.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Few persons of prominence in the political world were present at the reception at Greeley's farm to-day. Mr. Greeley stated that he had come to the determination of holding no more receptions, in consequence of the ill-health of his wife, and also of the course pursued by a New York journal.

THE CAMPAIGN IN NORTH CAROLINA.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 27.—Carl Schurz speaks here, Monday night.

The reported outrage on the occasion of Governor Harriman's speaking at this place is denied. There was nothing of a serious character.

LIBERAL RALLY AT LOUISVILLE.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., July 27.—An immense Greeley and Brown ratification meeting was held to-night. Several thousand persons, both white and colored, were gathered in front of the Court House, and were addressed by several eminent men of the State.

DEMOCRATIC NOMINATION AT SALT LAKE.

SALT LAKE, July 27.—The Democratic Territorial Convention met this afternoon, and nominated as delegate to Congress, George Q. Cannon, a prominent polygamist. The Cincinnati platform was indorsed.

CHANGE OF TITLE.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—The Ida Greeley Greye, an organization in Baltimore, of a political character, have changed their name, and are now known as the Monument Club. The proposition to change was received with much opposition, some saying it would hardly be civil, after having obtained the young lady's consent and that of her father to its use, to change it now. It was also shown that the Jessie Fremont Club did not subject that lady to improper remarks in 1856; but the resolution to take a new name was finally passed.

LOGAN IN NEBRASKA.

OMAHA, July 27.—The Republican meeting held at Lincoln last night was the largest ever held in the State. Senator Logan arrived here from Salt Lake in the evening, and spoke for three hours. Fully 5,000 people were present. General Logan speaks at Nebraska City to-night.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BOSTON, July 27.—The Republican State Convention will be held at Worcester, Aug. 28.

DETROIT, July 27.—Governor Baldwin declines a renomination, and has written a letter forbidding the use of his name in the Convention, if it should be decided to do so. Wayne County Convention, to-day, instructed its delegates to vote for John J. Bagley, of this city, for Governor at the State Convention.

MCCONNELLSBURG, Pa., July 27.—The Republican County Convention to-day nominated Hon. John Cessna for Congress.

FOREIGN.

Marriage of Mlle. Nilsson and M. Rousseau.

An Explanation Respecting the Interruption at Geneva.

GREAT BRITAIN.

LONDON, July 27.—Stanley, of Livingstone fame, is to arrive on Tuesday.

Christine Nilsson was married in Westminster Abbey, to-day, to M. Rousseau. The nuptials were witnessed by an immense assemblage, including many of the aristocracy and well-known artists. Among the persons present were Baron Brunnow, Russian Minister, R. C. Schenck, American Minister, Lady Peel and Mlle. Titiens. Count de Steenbock, Secretary of the Swedish Legation, gave the bride away, and the marriage ceremony was performed by Dean Stanley.

THE ARBITRATION.

GENEVA, July 27.—The recent interruption of the sittings of the Board of Arbitration occurred through the necessary re-examination of English law on questions regarding the construction of privateering vessels in British ports, and also an investigation as to whether the British Admiralty used sufficient diligence in preventing these vessels from going to sea. Of the four cases advanced, England repudiates three, and in the fourth she contends that the Admiralty acted promptly, although the police hesitated to take proper steps to prevent her departure. The Court is also considering the question of allowing interest on the amounts awarded. It is stated that a majority of the Board are unfavorable to such allowance. It is regarded as probable that after a careful investigation of each case the tribunal will fix the amount of indemnity to be paid by England at a gross sum.

Charles Francis Adams preserves a firm attitude in maintaining the claims of the United States. A conciliatory disposition universally manifested by the American representatives commands much admiration, as also does their assiduous labor in behalf of their cause.

SPAIN.

MADRID, July 27.—An official report is made to the Department of War, announcing the total defeat of a band of Carlists, numbering 1,000 men, in the North of Spain. Thirteen of the Carlists were killed and forty-five captured, ten of whom were wounded. The defeated insurgents carried off fifty of their wounded with them. The defeat of another band of insurgents is reported, with the loss of three men killed and many wounded.

MEXICO.

NEW YORK, July 27.—A special despatch from Matamoras says that the banished revolutionists are returning to Mexico. Telegraphic communications will be opened to the City of Mexico in a few days. Rocha and the revolutionary chiefs are to hold a conference on the 25th at Monterey. The revolution is virtually at an end.

FRANCE.

PARIS, July 27.—It is reported that the Duke D'Aumale intends resigning from the Assembly.

A landslide, yesterday, on the railway near Mont Cenis, obstructed the passage of an express train. There was no loss of life, but the passengers were obliged to walk three miles to reach another train.

PARIS, July 27.—The remains of Duke De Guise were buried to-day. Among those present at the funeral were Hon. E. B. Washburne and General William T. Sherman.

War Department Weather Prognostics.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Clear weather, with light north winds from Lake Erie to Tennessee, and eastward over the Middle and Eastern States; winds veering to northeasterly over Michigan and the upper lakes, with partly cloudy weather thence to the Ohio Valley; southerly to easterly winds in the Upper Mississippi and westward to the Missouri Valley, with a falling barometer and cloudy weather. To-night southerly to westerly winds continue in the Gulf, with threatening weather and local rains; southeasterly winds and cloudy weather on the South Atlantic.

WASHINGTON.

Another Card from General Pickett Regarding the Rebel Archives.

A Possible Job in Locks for Mail Pouches.

Special Despatch to The Chicago Tribune.

PICKETT AGAIN.

WASHINGTON, July 27.—General Pickett, after being denounced by Southern papers for selling the rebel archives—a matter upon which he seems tender—has written another letter, as follows:

To the Editor of the Patriot:

A forthcoming work on the "Diplomacy of the Rebellion," so called, being now very thoroughly advertised, its editor has written to me with a request to thank the press generally for the many first-rate notices it has given the subject, and thus allay the fears of all who seem to apprehend the Administration would fabricate documents to order. With all the shortcomings of the Cabinet, I am satisfied its members are incapable of so shallow and shabby an expedient. It ought to occur to the mind of any one versed in political affairs that a record duplicate of every paper [illegible] documents constitute a part of the history of the United States. Let us respect them as such. Should they afford the means of defeating scallawag claimants and their carpet-bag attorneys, I shall be glad of it.

JOHN T. PICKETT.

NEW MAIL BAG LOCKS.

All the mail routes and postal agents in the United States will receive in the course of a few weeks locks of a new design for the way mail pouches. The Department has completed arrangements for forwarding the locks at once. These locks are a patented variety, which, upon being accepted by the Department, places the owner of the patent at once among the millionaires of the country. From all that can be learned the lock in use for a few years has not been considered as faulty.

[To the Associated Press.]

CONSUL-GENERAL BUTLER.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The Herald's Washington despatch says that Consular Agent Starring's report, in the case of Consul General Butler, sustains most of the charges against that official. Butler's present location is not yet known at the State Department.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY and suite left here to-day for Pennsylvania, and on Tuesday week they will leave Boston for Europe. They will be joined by the Mayor of Yeddo. They are gratified with their visit here.

TREASURY STATEMENT.

The balance in the Treasury at the close of business to-day was: Currency, $11,424,353; coin, $69,919,613, including $31,856,900 in coin certificates.

THE CUBAN PRIVATEER.

The case of the Cuban privateer will be decided in a few days. All the official papers concerning it having been received at the Treasury Department.

ARKANSAS.

The Pope County Troubles.

LITTLE ROCK, July 27.—Parties from Pope County report that on Saturday the contempt case of Captain Barry, of the Dardanelle Transcript, charged with publishing a libellous article against the Court, was taken up. Defendant demurred to the jurisdiction of the Court, the publication having been made outside the county. The whole day was occupied in a discussion of this question. Four persons who had been arrested on war warrants sworn out by the Sheriff's party were present, demanding trial. The Judge adjourned Court till next day, Friday, telling the parties to go home and return next day. They did so, but the Judge failed to make his appearance. Two citizens went to see the Judge, who lives at Dardanelle, outside the county. He stated he was too unwell to come; that really it did not matter, there was not a single witness who could testify anything against the prisoners, and he directed them to be discharged and return home, remarking that they were honorably discharged under the law; that, where a Judge fails to proceed with an examination, Court is dissolved, and the parties released. So all parties are at liberty. Dodson, the Sheriff, Hickox, the Clerk, and Circuit Wayne County Convention, to-day, instructed its delegates to vote for John J. Bagley, of this city, for Governor at the State Convention.

School Superintendent Stewart, who had charge of the posse charged with murdering the prisoners Hale and Tucker, arrived in this city this evening by way of Duluth. It is thought to induce him to proclaim martial law. Citizens of the county also came down to prevent, if possible, any such contingency. Dodson & Co., who waived examination, and whose bail was fixed at $5,000, have not yet given bail, although they are at liberty. Many of the merchants of Russellville and Dover are removing their goods from the county, fearful of other outrages by the militia.

Lynch Law at Warrensburg.

KANSAS CITY, July 27.—At 2 o'clock yesterday morning, a mob of 300 persons took from jail John Sharp, who murdered John Erskine, and hung him. The Sheriff resisted the mob, but they attacked the jail, front and rear, breached the wall and took the prisoner. He confessed the murder. His body was delivered to his family, consisting of a wife and three children.

Clergyman Deposed.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 27.—Buffalo Presbytery deposed Rev. M. L. H. Thompson, who is charged with adultery at Jamestown, from the ministry, and indefinitely suspended him from communion. Rev. Mr. Thompson was suspended for a similar offense in Cincinnati, and on the recommendation of his Buffalo brethren that he had repented his sins, was reinstated.

Total indebtedness of every description.....$1,478,534 96
Total means on hand to meet same.....124,701 59

Net indebtedness over means on hand.....$1,353,833 37

Remainder of capital unpaid.....$2,756,452 50
Indebtedness paid and to become due Aug. 1st.....691,327 76
Less means on hand to meet same.....124,701 59

Deficiency on August indebtedness.....$ 566,626 17

The unpaid capital is double the amount of the indebtedness, rendering it absolutely certain that all of the latter will be paid, ultimately. It is, however, impossible to collect a further sum of $566,626.17 in time to set the Certificates of Indebtedness due Aug. 1, owing to the unavoidable delays of matting collections through the courts. Bonds have been instituted against a very large number of the stockholders, residing in the different States, but it is impossible to bring them to final judgment earlier than October or November next.

Holders of certificates are assured that they will all be paid at the earliest moment practicable, and that, in the judgment of the officers the August Certificates will be paid as early as the 1st of November next also, that they will bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from August 1st until public notice is given that the Company is prepared to meet them.

The Company is perfectly solvent; has paid to claimants, since last October, over $1,500,000; is protecting the interests of creditors by every means within its power, and only requires from them a few months' further extension of time to enable it to pay off the remainder of its indebtedness in full.

The foregoing statement does not include any cash claim or allowance for further losses upon policies still in force, which aggregate several millions of dollars.

A. DUDGEON, President.
C. E. PAYSON, Secretary.

NEW CHICAGO.

Weekly Review of Building Operations in the Burnt District.

A Rise in the Price of Brick and Lumber---The Rebate Bill.

Suburban Residences and Their Attractions for Young Married People.

Plans of New Buildings---The Second Presbyterian Church.

There is not much, if anything, new to report in the building line to-day, a description of the structures already finished, or that have been begun, having appeared weekly in THE TRIBUNE. The architects have got through with office work, and spend their time superintending the details carried on by the masons and carpenters. During the winter, plans will be perfected for new buildings to fill the remaining waste places, and in two years from the date of the fire, scarcely a trace of its ruins will be visible.

It is calculated that three-fourths of the burned area, and more than that proportion of the business district, will be rebuilt before the frost sets its veto upon work. Already the new streets are active with life and business, and shanties that have served their turn as temporary stores and offices are offered for sale. They will be removed, and fine buildings take their place one of these days. We are, certainly, a wonderful people, though we do say it ourselves, and let any people who think we are not get up and dust.

During the past week the new city has risen another story, that being the average height of building done in six days. On some buildings two or three stories can be placed in that time, while it takes two or three weeks to place a story upon others. It depends altogether on the style and character of the work. Fancy buildings of cut stone, which must be set with precision, take care and time, while an ordinary brick wall can be raised about as fast as men can lay brick. One story is about the average week's work.

The weather was not quite propitious last week. The windows of Heaven opened and the rain fell, one or two days, interfering, of course, to some extent with continuous work on other days, however, men were busy on some buildings, seemingly impervious to moisture, and certainly not afraid of it.

Materials have slightly advanced, everything being firm and with an upward tendency. Brick seemed most scarce, though there was no quotable rise in it, unless the manufacturers are aiding their stock to keep up the price. The usual complaint, however, is of the scarcity of lumber, which raised two and two and three dollars recently, and the difficulty in finding long lumber.

Mr. Washburne, in the last session of Congress, allowing certain articles need in building the burnt district to be imported free of duty, has not done very much to lighten the burden. It has touched but heavily on many. Its blessings have not been equally distributed. It was, as passed, essentially a measure to relieve the rich, and to the poor, who need it much more in need of encouragement and aid, it gave little or no assistance. Plate glass is the most important article in the bill, but comparatively few use it, and those few would not have been hampered, nor would their building operations have been delayed a single day, if Congress had not attempted to do a generous thing. So it is with the other articles in which the bond has been freed from its burden, the benefit hardly comes home to the poor man with a limited capital, whose ambition is to rear again on the blackened ruins of his former home, a seeming mockery for the family of his love. The rich and well-to-do will not soon forget the wrong perpetrated upon him and his children by the untimely and unnecessary conflagration which swept them from affluence on the outskirts grew in proportion. The result was that an impetus was given to suburban improvement, which will not be soon checked. Next years' rents will be reduced to reasonable amounts, and yearly every family will move out, some to rent in these suburban homes are the best in which to raise a family. Young men contemplating matrimony, should take cognizance of this fact. Boarding houses are not the places in which to cultivate and enjoy that domestic bliss which the poet regarded the only happiness which survived the capers of Adam and wife. The country is the spot. There the surroundings are of a higher order. The air is purer, and in the absence of the fascinations of the flesh, the morality is of a much better tone. The flowers are there shedding a glowing influence as they impregnate the air with delightful odors; trees flourish in spring, and fade in the fall, being a standing topic for wonderful improvement; the singing of birds, cows of heaven; early rising, that excellent adjunct of rural existence, is practiced, and soon the cheeks of the children glow with health. Servants; wives are better natured, children more cheerful and healthy, and everything is more delightful than in the city. These are some of the advantages of a suburban residence, to which might be added lowness of rents, and a removal from the temptations to extravagance, such as theatres and ice cream saloons, to which young married folks are once in a while addicted. It is no wonder, therefore, to see the rapid development of our many suburbs.

On the outskirts of the city bordering on the north, where the advantages of the suburbs only in a modified form. There are hundreds whose employment will not permit them to leave the city, who prefer that location, and to whom they should not be occupied more than they are at present. There is a large number, such as editors, reporters, printers, foremen, engineers, firemen, and others, who work at night, and for want of means of conveyance to the outskirts, are compelled to live in the city. These nocturnal workers get through with work after midnight, when the cars have stopped running, and weary and exhausted, must walk home. The consequence is, three miles perhaps in the cold and rain. The street railroad companies would run cars on the line between midnight and morning, if they would find passengers to fill the cars, and they would open an increase of traffic, besides improving the property near the terminus of their lines. They do they not do it?

SOME NEW BUILDINGS.

Mr. Boyington has in charge a new building for Mr. Hall on the east side of Wabash avenue, north of Harrison street, being built by George Wilson. It is to be 40 feet front, 102 deep, and five high. It will be furnished with an iron front, and be finished this year, at a cost of $20,000.

Mr. Boyington has executed two plans for Mr. Crane's building on Monroe street, opposite the Post Office. The dimensions will be 80 feet front, and the height five stories. It will have a fancy front in the Romanesque style, the material being Lake Superior brown stone. Cost, $50,000.

Mr. Boyington let the contract for the plate glass for the Pacific Hotel, last week, to Wolcott & Smith, of this city, for $18,000.

Herting, Adler & Co. have prepared plans for several new buildings, which are expected to be commenced immediately, and to be completed before winter. Among these are the following:

Mr. Partington's buildings on Wabash avenue, between Van Buren and Congress streets, 99 by 180 feet, four stories and basement, limestone front, to cost $80,000.

A four story and brick basement brick building, for offices and stores, on South Water street, between Franklin and Market streets, belonging to Messrs. Partington & Scranton. It will contain three stores, and cost $60,000.

Two stores for Haskell & Barker, on Michigan avenue, between Water and Rush streets, each 40 by 180 feet, four stories and basement, of brick, with stone dressing, and costing $75,000.

Two three story and basement brick buildings, fitted up for dwellings, in the upper stories, on West Van Buren, near Desplaines street, to cost $12 000. Mr. George Adams is the owner.

Four dwellings at the corner of Huron and Rush streets, for Mr. George S. Runsey. They will be of brick, three stories and basement high, and cost $20,000.

A residence for Mr. J. T. Ryerson, at the corner of Cass and Ontario streets, a two story and basement brick, with stone trimmings, to cost $40,000.

The same firm has let the contracts for $120,000 worth of buildings at the northeast corner of Randolph and Clark streets, belonging to the Kinzebury estate, and already described in these columns.

Mr. Frank Agnew, the builder, in conjunction with Messrs. Hennessy, is constructing two handsome residences, 50 feet front by 88 feet deep, on Superior street, between Cass and Rush streets. They will have three stories, and basements, with octagonal brick fronts of chaste appearance. The cost will be from $30,000 to $35,000. William Thomas is the architect.

The well known dry goods firm of C. W. & F. Peardridge & Co. have erected a five story and basement building at Nos. 118 and 120 State street, near Madison. The front is of Joliet stone, neatly ornamented. It is 40½ feet wide and 105 feet deep, designed specially for the dry goods business, and fitted up accordingly. The cost was $50,000. The firm has also leased Moormirk's new building, Nos. 122 and 124, the next west, making a total front of 81½ feet and one of the finest stores in the city.

THE NEW SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

Everyone remembers the old Second Presbyterian Church, at the corner of Washington street and Wabash avenue, not only because of its high standing as a church, but on account of the tremendous sacrifice of which it was built, and which gave it an antiquated appearance, that attracted attention. It succumbed to the conflagration, nothing remains of the noble pile but its broad towers and walls, which will be incorporated in the new edifice, and which will be a monument to the energy and the spirit of pious energy which has served to keep the congregation together in the wilderness of ecclesiastical architecture in the West. To this end the services of Mr. Renwick, of the firm of Renwick & Sands, of New York, who is justly celebrated as the best Gothicist in the country, were secured. He designed St. Patrick's Cathedral, the new Roman Catholic edifice on Fifth avenue, New York. As he designed the old Second Church ever so many years ago, the task of designing its successor was a labor of love. The plans were drawn under his direction, and the best superintendence of the work was given by the junior member of the firm of Carter & Drake, who was associated with Mr. Renwick in the construction of the old edifice. The style of architecture is middle Gothic, inclined to the early Gothic. It is intended to be of bituminous stone, which, worked up with the taste of a true artist, will give the building an appearance far less exacting than the limestone, and be less expensive. The front on Michigan avenue will measure 80 feet, the depth 165 feet, and the height to the top of the roof 90 feet. From the base a spire will soar heavenward to an altitude of 220 feet, the highest in the city. The front will be divided into three parts, a deep recess of 10 feet being in the centre, and 20 feet high. Surmounting it will be tracery canopy, flanked with pinnacled buttresses. Over the recess will be an arcade of five windows, and above that a large Morigold tracery window 25 feet in diameter. There will be a side entrance in the tower.

The entire story will have a continuous arcade of elaborate tracery windows, filled with stained glass, giving a dim, religious light, and a fine effect inside. There will be seven windows in each side.

The interior will be finished in superior style. The organ, loft and gallery will be in front, facing the pulpit. The seating capacity will be for 2,500 persons.

At the rear of the church, in a separate building, will be a lecture and Sunday school room 40 by 90.

The entire cost will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $180,000. It will not be the largest or the most expensive church in the country, but in points of purity of style, strength, durability, and general excellence, it will be without a rival in the West.

The workmen are now busy laying the dimension stone of the basement, and a year, if not more, will be occupied in completing the undertaking.

THE ST. JAMES' CHURCH PLANS

have been suspended upon, and working drawings are being prepared as fast as possible for the execution of the work, which is to be commenced at once. The old tower remains with the marks of the fire still upon it, a monument of the trials through which the city has passed. This, together with the south side wall and the lower portion of the west wall will be incorporated in the new church. Great care has been shown in the adaptation of the new work, to conform with the style that is marked out, by what remains. The new church will rival the old one in convenience and beauty. The general plan is in the form of a cross, with the interior corner, at the intersection of Huron and Cass streets, the tower comes out to the line of both streets, and is in advance of the rest of the wall of which it forms the main body of the structure, on the north side previously. Then comes the transepts, projecting on either side—some twenty feet, and being sixty in width to two of the side windows. In the south west transept is to be the choir and organ gallery, and in the north transept there will be a gallery above. East of the north transept is the entrance to the vestry, auditorium and gallery, over transepts. In the rear is the octagonal end of the chancel. The roof is high and broken by means of windows showing in the interior as clear story windows), and by bands of green slate, laid in ornamental pattern. The timber is to be left in front of the chancel, in the transepts and main roof a "roofrider," which serves as part of the means of ventilation; besides the windows and doors. The seating is on the circular plan, with aisles in the form of a cross. The south gable, now standing, is to have a portion of the window remain. The new portion of the front will be carried up (from the present belt above the stone doors) in a gable, surmounted by a cross. The buttresses, on either side of the central entrance, terminate with a gabled canopy, upheld by a delicate detached column. Between these buttresses is a large window, filled with stone tracery, and above, three narrow louvres for ventilation. On either side of the large window are two circular ones. The north side has a covered porch for entrance to vestry, in the same position as the former one, and the side entrances upon the south side will remain unchanged. The vestry will have a large lecture-room with infants' class-room in one transept and Bible class-room in the other, connecting by means of large folding doors, with the Lecture-room. A large library is also connected with the vestry. Ample toilet rooms have been provided for. The entrances to the front vestibule are as before, through three doors in the west front and one in the north face of the tower. This vestibule is one broad, flight of steps in the centre, with gallery to the side doors, thus leaving the monument, now standing, in its full view upon entering. The auditorium is 61 feet 6 inches wide and 114 feet long, with transepts at east end of 18 feet 6 inches by 25 feet, and a chancel of 36 feet by 21 feet, with five sides, lighted by windows elevated from the floor. Above the vestibule, and entered by means of a winding stairway from the front, is the organ loft, connected by means of a large window, similar to that of the south, with the ladies' parlor. This connected by means of a large window, similar to the one in the front, with the ladies' parlor. This is designed for the choir, and is to be used as a gallery for occasional uses. The decoration and stained glass will be carefully executed in harmony with each other. An extra opportunity is given by the large open roof, which will show all its constructive lines. The heating and ventilation has been carefully considered and provided for.

This work of reconstruction has been entrusted to the care of Messrs. H. Ivory Faulkner, Geo. S. Clarke, Architects, in Boone Block, who have other churches and buildings under their charge, both in this city, and in Boston, Mass.

Mr. Moore, builder of Myers' Opera House, on Monroe street near State, reports the completion of the brick work.

Mr. Agnew has a large staff of men on Hooley's Opera House, on Randolph street, opposite the Court House, and it is expected that the first performance will take place on the anniversary of the fire.

Aiken's Theatre, on Wabash avenue, near Congress street, is going ahead rapidly. The interior decoration has been entrusted to the skilful hands of Signor Giovanni Mehli, the leading scenic artist of Chicago, and will be after the elaborate ornamentation of the proscenium of McVicker's Theatre has already been commented on in these columns. Popular Superstitions in Corfu.

On Easter day in Corfu, when the ringing of bells at noon responds to the voice of the Bishop, "Our Lord is Risen," the windows are thrown up and a crash of old crockery resounds along the pavements of the narrow streets; old women shout "avaunt fleas, bugs, and all vermin! make way for our Lord of all he enter!" accompany the invocation with a shower of broken pots and pans. On these occasions, woe to the luckless stranger who may be walking the streets of Corfu in unhappy ignorance of this domestic institution, of which, perchance, a noiseless water-jug flying in dangerous proximity to his own head, may suddenly enlighten him. Greek saints, which, in a measure, supply the places of the gods of a passed away mythology, are invoked for blessings and assistance in all the important affairs of maritime and agricultural life. The planting of the seed and the gathering of the fruits requires each a benediction, a boat purchased by a Christian or Turk must be formally purified. St. Eustace is respectfully requested to free the field or vineyard from caterpillars; St. Peter to send rain in time of drought; to the gardeners's pets and lines; Elijah blesses salt; St. Procopius protects the thick skull of the lambs on Easter day, a single hair or daughter of the lambs on Easter day, a lock of wool is dipped in the blood and a cross is inscribed with it on the lintel of the door. Would the necessary of old Islanders the obolo, a small piece of money, has been deposited in the coffin of the dead to pay Charon his fee across the Styx. It is stated that the country evil spirits are supposed in parts of the country evil spirits are supposed to be abroad at noon, during the month of August, and the peasants shut themselves up in their houses. A coffin-nail, here, as in many other parts of the world, when driven into the door post of a house, affords perfect security from ghosts, and a triangular bit of paper on which is written the name of a disease effectually prevented the appearance of the malady in that neighborhood. Rags tied to a bit of stick receive the evil spirits exorcised by the "papas" or priest. To drop oil bodes no good, and to see a priest at sunrise is a very bad omen. Such are the superstitions of these reverend ones, and a convenient apology for the want of staggers. It is but fair to say that these and a number other superstitions are chiefly prevalent in the remote country, and in the towns are only to answer the purposes of the lower classes.—*Charles L. RELIGIOUS.

The New Pastor of Grace Presbyterian Church---Programme of Services in the Churches To-Day---Episcopal and Roman Catholic Calendar.

Grace Presbyterian Church has called to its pastorate the Rev. E. E. S. Ely, formerly of Stockton, Cal., at a salary of $5,000 per annum. Mr. Ely occupied the pulpit of the First Presbyterian Church in Stockton for more than three years, and his ministry was instrumental in making that a strong society and congregation. He is spoken of as a man of far more than ordinary ability. Faithful in the discharge of his duties, ardent in work and eloquent in speech, his labors in the church were eminently successful. Grace Church has certainly chosen a strong man to guide its fortunes, and now enters upon its career as a Presbyterian outpost with every prospect of an enviable history. Previous to his departure from Stockton, a meeting of his congregation was held, when the following preambles and resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Rev. Benjamin E. S. Ely has deemed it necessary, in consideration of his own health and the welfare of his children, to go East, and has so informed the congregation of the pastoral relationship existing between him and the First Presbyterian Church of the City of Stockton; and,

WHEREAS, We, the members of said Church and congregation, have deemed it our duty under the circumstances to comply with the request of Brother Ely, and have accepted his resignation therefore,

Resolved, That the ministrations of Rev. Mr. Ely have been highly appreciated by this church, have been attended with great good in the numerous additions to the membership, and, we trust, the increased spirituality of the church.

Resolved, That we believe Brother Ely, in consideration of his high intellectual abilities, eloquent address, and fervor of spirit, to be eminently qualified for usefulness in the Church.

Resolved, That while deeply regret the necessity that impels our beloved pas or to withdraw from us, we most heartily commend him to the Great Head of the Church, and to the most unqualified confidence and earnest Christian love of the people of God, believing that he will be a great blessing to any people with whom he lot may be cast.

Rev. Mr. Ely will preach to-day at the chapel of the Chicago University, Cottage Grove, at 11 a. m. and 7:45 p. m.

EPISCOPAL.

The Rev. Edward Sullivan, Rector of Trinity Church, has returned to the city from his trip to Europe, and will meet his congregation as usual to-day in Crystal Hall at 10:45 a. m., and 7:45 p.m. The subject both morning and evening is "A Journey Through Canadilings by the Way."

[illegible] in the morning and evening with the congregation or the spirit of pious energy which has served to found it. The old church will be swallowed up in the Maelstrom of business, but its successor, a grander edifice, will rise gloriously from the beautify on the northwest corner of Michigan avenue and Twentieth street. Much time and thought has been given to designing a building that should be worthy of its holy work. Nothing like it in the city, and be the finest specimen of ecclesiastical architecture in the West. To this end the services of Mr. Renwick, of the firm of Renwick & Sands, of New York, who is justly celebrated as the best Gothicist in the country, were secured. He designed St. Patrick's Cathedral, the new Roman Catholic edifice on Fifth avenue, New York. As he designed the old Second Church ever so many years ago, the task of designing its successor was a labor of love. The plans were drawn under his direction, and the best superintendence of the work was given by the junior member of the firm of Carter & Drake, who was associated with Mr. Renwick in the construction of the old edifice. The style of architecture is middle Gothic, inclined to the early Gothic. It is intended to be of bituminous stone, which, worked up with the taste of a true artist, will give the building an appearance far less exacting than the limestone, and be less expensive. The front on Michigan avenue will measure 80 feet, the depth 165 feet, and the height to the top of the roof 90 feet. From the base a spire will soar heavenward to an altitude of 220 feet, the highest in the city. The front will be divided into three parts, a deep recess of 10 feet being in the centre, and 20 feet high. Surmounting it will be tracery canopy, flanked with pinnacled buttresses. Over the recess will be an arcade of five windows, and above that a large Morigold tracery window 25 feet in diameter. There will be a side entrance in the tower.

The entire story will have a continuous arcade of elaborate tracery windows, filled with stained glass, giving a dim, religious light, and a fine effect inside. There will be seven windows in each side.

The interior will be finished in superior style. The organ, loft and gallery will be in front, facing the pulpit. The seating capacity will be for 2,500 persons.

At the rear of the church, in a separate building, will be a lecture and Sunday school room 40 by 90.

The entire cost will be somewhere in the neighborhood of $180,000. It will not be the largest or the most expensive church in the country, but in points of purity of style, strength, durability, and general excellence, it will be without a rival in the West.

The workmen are now busy laying the dimension stone of the basement, and a year, if not more, will be occupied in completing the undertaking.

THE ST. JAMES' CHURCH PLANS

have been suspended upon, and working drawings are being prepared as fast as possible for the execution of the work, which is to be commenced at once. The old tower remains with the marks of the fire still upon it, a monument of the trials through which the city has passed. This, together with the south side wall and the lower portion of the west wall will be incorporated in the new church. Great care has been shown in the adaptation of the new work, to conform with the style that is marked out, by what remains. The new church will rival the old one in convenience and beauty. The general plan is in the form of a cross, with the interior corner, at the intersection of Huron and Cass streets, the tower comes out to the line of both streets, and is in advance of the rest of the wall of which it forms the main body of the structure, on the north side previously. Then comes the transepts, projecting on either side—some twenty feet, and being sixty in width to two of the side windows. In the south west transept is to be the choir and organ gallery, and in the north transept there will be a gallery above. East of the north transept is the entrance to the vestry, auditorium and gallery, over transepts. In the rear is the octagonal end of the chancel. The roof is high and broken by means of windows showing in the interior as clear story windows), and by bands of green slate, laid in ornamental pattern. The timber is to be left in front of the chancel, in the transepts and main roof a "roofrider," which serves as part of the means of ventilation; besides the windows and doors. The seating is on the circular plan, with aisles in the form of a cross. The south gable, now standing, is to have a portion of the window remain. The new portion of the front will be carried up (from the present belt above the stone doors) in a gable, surmounted by a cross. The buttresses, on either side of the central entrance, terminate with a gabled canopy, upheld by a delicate detached column. Between these buttresses is a large window, filled with stone tracery, and above, three narrow louvres for ventilation. On either side of the large window are two circular ones. The north side has a covered porch for entrance to vestry, in the same position as the former one, and the side entrances upon the south side will remain unchanged. The vestry will have a large lecture-room with infants' class-room in one transept and Bible class-room in the other, connecting by means of large folding doors, with the Lecture-room. A large library is also connected with the vestry. Ample toilet rooms have been provided for. The entrances to the front vestibule are as before, through three doors in the west front and one in the north face of the tower. This vestibule is one broad, flight of steps in the centre, with gallery to the side doors, thus leaving the monument, now standing, in its full view upon entering. The auditorium is 61 feet 6 inches wide and 114 feet long, with transepts at east end of 18 feet 6 inches by 25 feet, and a chancel of 36 feet by 21 feet, with five sides, lighted by windows elevated from the floor. Above the vestibule, and entered by means of a winding stairway from the front, is the organ loft, connected by means of a large window, similar to that of the south, with the ladies' parlor. This is designed for the choir, and is to be used as a gallery for occasional uses. The decoration and stained glass will be carefully executed in harmony with each other. An extra opportunity is given by the large open roof, which will show all its constructive lines. The heating and ventilation has been carefully considered and provided for.

This work of reconstruction has been entrusted to the care of Messrs. H. Ivory Faulkner, Geo. S. Clarke, Architects, in Boone Block, who have other churches and buildings under their charge, both in this city, and in Boston, Mass.

Mr. Moore, builder of Myers' Opera House, on Monroe street near State, reports the completion of the brick work.

Mr. Agnew has a large staff of men on Hooley's Opera House, on Randolph street, opposite the Court House, and it is expected that the first performance will take place on the anniversary of the fire.

Aiken's Theatre, on Wabash avenue, near Congress street, is going ahead rapidly. The interior decoration has been entrusted to the skilful hands of Signor Giovanni Mehli, the leading scenic artist of Chicago, and will be after the elaborate ornamentation of the proscenium of McVicker's Theatre has already been commented on in these columns. We wonder that our builders should go abroad when such competent artists can be found in the city.

THE NEW CHICAGO.

Nine months have passed since the Great Fire, during three of which building was necessarily suspended, and already the new city has reached beautiful proportions. Hardly had the flames and the heat subsided when the district was thronged with teams loaded with lumber for the erection of temporary buildings. The first necessity for these having been satisfied, the district then swarmed with laborers delving amid the ruins, some excavating the debris, others piling and cleaning the brick and stone, and thousands of teams were engaged in hauling off the rubbish. This work occupied all October and November, and until the snow prohibited its further prosecution. During the same time hundreds of new foundations were laid, and a number of large warehouses and blocks were pushed ahead for immediate occupancy. Farwell & Co., Field, Leiter & Co., and the Union Building Company contracted in getting their immense establishments under cover before winter, and were, therefore, able to finish the interior for occupancy with little delay. Notwithstanding the severity of winter, labor was hardly suspended during the season. Though much out-door labor was necessarily discontinued, other labor progressed, and, when spring opened again, the thousands who had been engaged during the fall were duplicated and triplicated. We question whether, at any time in modern ages, there have ever been so many men, mechanics and laborers of all kinds, and so many horses engaged at one time in building within the same area as have been at work in the burnt district of the South Division of Chicago, since the first day of May. The lineal frontage of the streets in this district, excluding the intersections, is in excess of twenty-six miles; and the area bounded and intersected by these streets has been covered with men and boys, and horses and wagons, and with building materials of every description. The derricks stand up all over this district like the masts of shipping in the crowded harbor. To a spectator it would seem, from the energy and the multitude employed, that nothing less than the eternal salvation of mankind depended upon having the entire district covered with six-story brick, or stone, or iron buildings before the anniversary of the fire; and that special places of honor among the elect are to be given to the builders in the order in which the buildings are completed. We do not wish it to be understood that a new building is in course of erection upon every lot in the burnt district of the South Division; but we do say that the buildings already completed and those now under construction will outnumber, as they will exceed in style, value, and solidity, the buildings which were destroyed by the fire in the same district. Neither do we wish it understood that the new buildings have been erected upon the old sites. This is largely the case; but many of the finest blocks in the New Chicago have been, and are now erecting upon sites which before the fire were occupied [illegible]

While it is a physical, if not a pecuniary impossibility to cover the whole of the South Division of the burnt district in one season, there is no man who can look upon what has been accomplished, and what is now going on, without profound astonishment. The most enthusiastic believer in Chicago energy is unable to express even his astonishment at the wonderful creation that has taken place.

But this does not by any means relate all that Chicago has done in the few months that have intervened since the fire. In the North Division, the hand of labor has been industriously employed. Dwellings for 70,000 people have been erected, and, though the stores are not in proportion, numerically or in size, with those south of the river, much has been done even in this respect.

In West Chicago, outside of the burnt district, there have been, or will be this season, erected as many permanent buildings and blocks of brick, stone, and iron as in any previous season were built in all Chicago. From these facts some faint idea may be gathered of how many people have been at work in Chicago, and how much money has been expended. A striking incident in the history of this rebuilding of Chicago is, that the workmen have rejected every appeal to strike, and that the deposits in the savings banks have increased, since April, nearly two millions of dollars.

Notwithstanding this extra work, the ordinary business of Chicago has been unprecedented. We have received and shipped, or have on hand, more grain and more provisions than ever before; we have sold more goods for consumption in the city, and have added immensely to our sales to points outside of the city. Independent of the increase of trade in building materials, the business of 1872 will show that we have bought and sold 40 per cent more merchandise than in any previous year.

At no time has there been any scarcity of money for either commercial or building purposes. Any man who has a lot can get all the money he needs to improve it, and on easy terms, notwithstanding all that has been expended in building in this city. Money is now in abundance, far in excess of the demand.

Travelling in the burnt district is yet somewhat perilous; the streets are still crowded with building materials, and the sidewalks with derricks, mortar-beds, and the appliances of building; nevertheless, the new city is already advanced far enough to show that, when this rubbish is removed and the thoroughfares cleared of their obstructions, there will be built upon the burnt district of Chicago the handsomest, most substantial, and busiest city on the American Continent.

DID GREELEY BURN CHICAGO?

The statement now going the rounds of the Grant papers, that Horace Greeley was concerned in the Confederate plots to burn Northern cities and massacre the women and children, is sufficiently terrifying, even when making allowances for the well-known blood-thirsty character of the Philosopher. It is not generally known, however, that, while he was engaged in laying his diabolical incendiary plans, he also concocted a cunningly-devised arrangement for burning Chicago, and successed in carrying out his design last October. The coolness and malignity with which Mr. Greeley went to work are well-nigh unparalleled. The readers of his famous work on farming will remember that he advises dairymaids, whenever they have occasion to milk at night, always to take kerosene-lamps into the stable with them. This fact by itself would have no special significance; but, when it is shown that Mr. Greeley had a kicking cow on his farm, and that he sold that cow to Mrs. O'Leary, of Chicago, and that Mrs. O'Leary was a warm admirer of Mr. Greeley's bucolic essay, we think we have established one link in the chain of evidence. It is a well-established fact that the destruction of our forests produces drought. It is equally well established that for years past Mr. Greeley has been engaged in cutting down his Chappaqua forest, and that Chappaqua and Chicago are in the same parallel of drought. It is shown, therefore, that he was engaged in producing dry weather, that he sold the incendiary cow to Mrs. O'Leary, knowing what she would do, and advised the best method of accomplishing the result. And he did it successfully. We do not know what other horrors Mr. Greeley may have in store for this afflicted country, but of the truth of this story there can be no doubt. There are plenty of parties in the South, and North too, who stand ready to produce the original documents, provided Mr. Boutwell will again put his hands into the Treasury and take out $75,000 of the people's money to pay for them. Mr. Greeley having always taken grounds against Erie and other corruptions and frauds, it may also be possible to show that he burned up the Erie Railroad shops at Jersey City, a day or two ago; and, as he is also accused of intentions to go down South and murder all the women and children, is it not conclusive that he is the author of the floods now devastating Alabama?

TOM MURPHY CAUGHT.

Mr. Tom Murphy, after diving repeatedly under the government lines, [illegible] was incautious enough to indite and publish the following letter:

NO. 2 PINE STREET, NEW YORK, July 23, 1872.
Hon Milo Goodrich, Dryden, N. Y.

SIR: In a report of a speech recently made by you at Ithaca, I read that, speaking of the President of the United States, you said: "He now resole in Long Branch, in a cottage given by Thomas murphy."

Now, sir, this oft-rep-ated statement is wholly false. I will not give the President his house, nor contribute a cent towards its purchase; and, so far as I know and believe, he purchased it and paid for it with his own money.

Assuming you to be a gentleman, you will retract this statement as publicly as you uttered it.
Yours respectfully, THOMAS MURPHY.

Mr. Murphy suggests a falsehood. The money was subscribed, to the amount of $85,000, for the purchase of the cottage and land at Long Branch, its purchase for that sum having been previously arranged with Mr. Howard Potter, the owner. When the whole sum was collected, it was deposited in bank to Grant's credit, and he gave a check for the amount to Mr. Potter. The pretence that Murphy did not know what his subscription was intended for is absurd. But now comes Mr. A. T. Stewart, who says that the subscription paper was presented to him; that it recited the object was to purchase the house at Long Branch; and that, when Stewart saw the paper, it had the signature of Mr. Tom Murphy. Stewart refused to subscribe. It is possible, as General Pleasonton says of Grant, that Mr. Murphy's memory is treacherous; that he occasionally forgets facts; and forgetfulness in a man who is playing the difficult part assigned to Murphy is an unfortunate circumstance. Senator Douglas used to say, in cases of this kind, that "Liars should have good memories."

WAGNER AND BEETHOVEN.

A notable book has quietly made its appearance during the past week, which is destined to awaken unusual interest in the esthetic world. We refer to Richard Wagner's famous philosophical essay on the music of Beethoven, which created a profound sensation in Germany when it first appeared. It has been admirably translated by Albert W. Parsons, with the express permission of Wagner, is published by Benham Bros. of [illegible] and may be had of Jansen, McClurg & Co., of this city. There was a time in this country, and that quite recently, when the announcement of this book, or any other musical production of Wagner's, would have excited no interest whatever. It would at once have been referred to that indefinite "future" to which it has been the fashion to assign his music. That time, however, has gone by, and, to-day, Wagner has rallied about him the best musical intelligence of Germany and of this country; and this, too, by his individual persistence and courage, and the sympathy of King Louis of Bavaria, who for many years was denounced by the anti-Wagnerites as crazy for his devotion to Wagner. It is rather remarkable that both Carl Zerrahn, the best conductor of vocal music, and Theodore Thomas, the best conductor of instrumental music, in this country, are enthusiastic believers in Wagner and his musical theory. The influence which two such men can exert in music is almost incalculable, and, by the aid of their joint endeavors, the people will yet be convinced of the truth of the Wagnerian theories, and will be educated up to the appreciation of Wagnerian music.

It is not our intention at present to make a review of this work, but rather to call attention to it, and to urge upon musicians and musical connoisseurs a careful and thoughtful reading of it. It is not a book to be skimmed over or run through in an afternoon. Every sentence in it is full of thought. It is an analysis of Beethoven's music, the circumstances which affected it, the foundation upon which it was based, and the subtle causes of the influence which it has exerted, written by a man of almost Titanic intellect, upon whom the mantle of Beethoven has fallen. As a philosopher, poet, dramatist, and musician, he stands well-nigh peerless, and anything which such a man has to offer is worthy of the most serious consideration by thoughtful men. Wagner and Beethoven alike founded their ideas of music in universal nature and man's inner consciousness, not in an adaptation of the objective forms of music to the senses, resulting only in the barrenness of melody. These two giants in music have developed it from the same sources whence sprung the dramas of Shakspeare, and, in this respect, these two branches of art are akin. Wagner has carried his ideas farther, because the science of music has advanced immeasurably since Beethoven's day. Orchestration in Beethoven's time was almost barren compared with its possibilities now, and dramatic resources were comparatively as meagre. With the majority of people, melody is the sum and substance of music. For these Beethoven has written his songs, and Wagner has written his "Flying Dutchman," and "Rienzi," and "Lohengrin." To others, melody is but an accessory of music, and for these Beethoven has written his symphonies and sonatas, and Wagner his Meistersaenger, Tannhauser, Tristan and Isolde, and the great Nibelungen Trilogy, which will be given next summer at the Bayreuth Festal Theatre. Which of these is destined to live can be answered by the past. Beethoven's symphonies and sonatas have come down to us in all their original freshness and beauty, and find a thousand listeners now where they found one in the days when he was fighting the Italian melodic school. But where are the forty operas of Handel, the thirty operas of Hadyn, and the almost innumerable works of Cherubini, Scarlatti, Porpora, Mehul, Piccini, and others, which were redundant with exquisite melodies? And of modern composers like Rossini, Bolledieu, Verdi, Bellini, Donizetti, Meyerbeer, and others, how is it that only a little handful of their works survive, while scores of them were shelved within a year's time of their composition? It is not because melody is not music that these works have but a short existence, but because melody is not all of music. Melody is as essential to music as counterpoint; but music, to live and be immortal, must have its roots in something deeper than the merely passionate and sensual. It must spring from universal nature, and must be a part of human consciousness. It is the art embracing all arts. Madame De Stael compared architecture to frozen music. Blind Laura Bridgman compared the color of scarlet to the sound of the trumpet. Both its analogies and its affinities are everywhere to be found, in nature and in man; and it is only when it is so regarded and so treated that it becomes the universal language, capable of giving expression, not only to the passions, but to every shade of emotion, and voices those thoughts which otherwise must remain forever concealed in the soul.

We do not purpose to enter into a review of the details of the true musical theory, which would constitute a review of the work before us. We have only desired to call the attention of every one interested in music that this famous work is now attainable in English, and to urge its thoughtful perusal. At the same time, it recalls the victory which Richard Wagner has achieved, after twenty years of fierce struggling with poverty, ignorance, opposition, and derision. No wonder that the man has been made arrogant, intolerant, and bitter. Twenty years of such a contest would have killed ordinary men. He has struggled on with one man by his side, King Louis of Bavaria, and has triumphed. Next year will witness the inauguration of one of the grandest temples of Art in the world with the great creation of Wagner,—the Nibelungen Trilogy,—ever thereafter to be the school for the German national music and drama, which he has done so much to elevate and purify. With the stirring epics of the old mythology, the troubadour richness of the twelfth century, and the grand lyric works of Wolfram von Eschenbach and Gottfried of Strasbourg, in addition to his own elevated poetic creations, allied to his marvellous music, he has marked as distinct an era in the world's history of music as did Haydn in instrumentation and Beethoven in composition.

CONTINENTAL SUNDAY.

The Interior, an organ of the Presbyterian Church in Chicago, takes THE TRIBUNE to task because we recently gave an account of the laying of the corner-stone of the new Turner Hall, "with processions, banners, and rivers of lager;" also, of racing on the Boulevards, and a grand civil and military reception of the French Band,—all on Sunday,—without expressing our grief at this prevalence of the "Continental Sunday" over the Puritan Sunday in Chicago. Our neighbor says:

It is hoped that Christian citizens will take this matter in hand. We are not an advocate for the enforcement of our religious opinions or observances on others. We think, however, there can be no question as to the right of the State to make one day in seven a day for religious worship,—leaving the worshiper free to perform its acts of worship as he thinks fit,—but the State, as he may elect, and, in so doing, to put an absolute taboo on all processions or public gatherings in state, not religious. In a Christian state, largely in the majority, they have the civil right, as Buddhists would have in similar circumstances, to have such days or festivals established with peculiar reference to themselves, even though horse-racing citizens should howl at an infringement of their rights.

Our neighbor seems to think it of trifling importance what God is worshiped, provided some kind of worship is going on, on one day in seven. This, it thinks, the State should enforce. What, then, would become of the liberty which Paul exhorts all Christians to maintain, and under which "One man preferreth one day above another, and another keepeth every day alike"?

In these realms [illegible] Buddhism and the various forms of Paganism than there is between those who observe one day above another and those who observe every day alike? Would it be better for our citizens to be firing off Chinese crackers in the Temples of Josh, provided they did it on Sunday, than to be driving on the Boulevards in search of a little exhilarating oxygen? If our neighbor is so religiously anxious that only some form of worship shall be transacted on Sunday, it can soothe its offended conscience by classifying the dedication of Turner Hall as a worship of Thor, Hercules, and Gambrinus; the reception of the French Band as in adoration of Euterpe and Calliope; and the racing on the Boulevards as an humble prostration of spirit before Apollo, Mercury, and Minerva. These are questions of religious taste, in which the secular press are not deeply interested. But, if we were, we should doubt the orthodoxy of the paper that cared more about enforcing a Puritan idea of observing Sunday, than whether the worship of the American people is directed to the Christian God or the Hindoo devil Siva.

SLEEP.

Perhaps the most obscure phenomenon of life to the physiologist is sleep,—the function so beautifully described by Shakspeare:

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleave of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labor's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great Nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast.

Of late years, some of the most eminent physicians have devoted much time to the effort to discover the proximate cause of this function, which the great modern increase of nervous diseases preventing sleep renders of interest to a large class of persons. The older physiologists accounted for sleep by saying that it is due to the exhaustion of the nervous fluid during waking hours, and that its function is to restore this nervous fluid. But the assumption that there is nervous fluid, i. e., that there is any fluid circulating through the brain and nerves, as the blood circulates through the heart-arteries and veins—is wholly unsustained by experiment and observation. The entire brain and nervous system are very nearly fluid,—about 80 per cent of water, held in a state sufficiently solid to preserve its shape and form, by 20 per cent of albuminous, saline, and fatty substance. Other than this there is no nervous fluid, and, hence, the above theory of sleep must itself sleep until some nerve-vital fluid shall be discovered.

Another and later theory was, that sleep is produced by the sinking or collapse of the cerebellum, or little brain, induced by the pressure thereon of the larger brain. It is found, however, that pressure on the cerebrum, or larger brain, produces sleep in like manner. Blumenbach contended, with great plausibility, that sleep is caused by the diminution in the flow of blood to the brain; and this was sustained by the fact that, in natural and healthy sleep, the brain becomes pale, its temperature is reduced, and its actual bulk is less, showing that there is a withdrawal of blood. It is found, however, that certain narcotics produce sleep by causing a withdrawal of blood from the brain, while others cause sleep by inducing congestion, or an excessive fulness of blood in the brain.

Dr. Richardson, who contributes an article on this subject to the Popular Science Monthly, has caused sleep by exposing a part of the brain to extreme cold, as by a local application of ice. In this case the temperature was reduced ten or twelve degrees, and the brain became solid, fixed, and bloodless. But if, on awakening the animal on which these experiments were made, he applied warm applications, or restored the natural warmth too quickly the animal fell asleep again from exactly the opposite conditions. The engorging of the vessels with blood had the same effect as the withdrawal of blood from them. Dr. Richardson concludes that luring sleep the matter of the brain is changed to a state of greater solidity; that its molecular changes and motion cease; and that the brain thereupon ceases to convey any stimulus to the voluntary muscles. The change is, in a minor degree, the same as that which occurs in case of death.

There have been many effortsmade in this city since the fire to organize one or more clubs of professional base-ball players, and, to the credit of the city it should be said, these attempts have proved failures. It is creditable to many of the young men who would make good ball-players, that they prefer to work at some other business for a living. There are perhaps somedfty or sixty in the city who are waiting for "capital" to organize a club; when capital presents itself, the "nines" are ready to hire themselves out at liberal salaries as professional players. For six months every respectable citizen selected to head these gambling organizations has had the good sense, and enough respect for public opinion, to decline the nonsense. The result is, that there are from five to eight nines "out of employment," and they are grieving at the difficulty of making a living in Chicago. It is, perhaps, unknown to these athletic young men that there are a number of buildings going up in this city, and that these buildings are erected by manual labor. Any five of these occupations these gentlemen might obtain good wages, and, if they kept sober and work well, they can save more money than they can at base ball. Their personal vigor and hardened hands will give them an advantage over competing laborers. They will acquire the habits of industry and frugality; they will learn the use of water as a beverage, and be surprised at its superiority; they will work six days honestly, and spend the seventh day in rest. It will not require three months at honest labor of this kind to make them ashamed that they had wasted so many months loafing and drinking, begging somebody to hire them as professional athletes. No city in the country offers so much employment at such high wages for athletic young men as Chicago, at this time, and, under these circumstances, the organization of a professional ball club in this city deserves the enforcement of the law against vagrants.

One of the most remarkable criminals of the century is now in prison in Ireland. His name is Sadlier. He was the son of a small tradesman in Roscrea, Ireland. A successful law-practice made him moderately rich. He became a banker, grew wealthy rapidly, and was sent to Parliament. In London, everything he touched turned to gold. To dispose of his income, he kept two splendid "establishments" in the city, gambled away in six months nearly $1,000,000 at the aristocratic White's Club, and plunged into every extravagant folly. At last, the crash came. His own fortune was gone, the capital of his partners, the savings of the shop-girls, and the results of a series of audacious forgeries were gone. The roar of execration was checked for an instant by the discovery, on Hampton Heath, of a dead body, with a suicide's written confession lying beside it. A disconsolate servant identified the remains, and the body was buried amid the curses of the thousands of persons whom Sadlier had ruined. The dead man rose from his grave. Last June, he was seen by one of his victims at a hotel in Normandy. English detectives were telegraphed for, a requisition was issued, and the embezzler and forger was arrested. The disconsolate servant and a "resurrectionist" had prepared the body found on the Heath, and Sadlier, after writing the confession, had fled to the Continent, where he has lived for years.

London is mainly supplied with milk from the dairies in Islington. We glean from an English review a curious story of the woes of an honest dairyman. When he bought his milk-walk, the seller offered him, for $30, his receipt for adulterating the fluid. It was indignantly refused. He furnished his customers pure milk,—and he lost nearly every one! Then he employed men to alter the color, the taste, the effects of the liquid, accused him of adulterating it, and went to other dealers. In despair, he bought the offered receipt. It gave directions for watering the milk, and for compounding a certain mixture (a rank poison), one drop of which would give a pan of milk the appearance of cream. The purchaser recoiled from such courses, made another effort to find purchasers for pure milk, failed, and sold out.

Our countless breach-of-promise suits have resulted in countless estimates of the value of the feminine heart. Luckless bachelors have been obliged to pay from one cent to many thousands of dollars for sinfully gazing possession of this particular organ. Its precise cash-equivalent will soon, however, be fixed by a German jury. A Berlin doctor attended a young woman who was suffering from heart-disease, and, when she died, prevailed upon her mother to give him her heart in the interests of science. When his bill of eight thalers fifteen groschen was presented, the mother claimed that the gift was sufficient payment. The doctor demurred and has brought suit. The result will show whether or not a maiden's heart is worth (in Germany) eight thalers fifteen groschen,—about $6 15.

A fine painting by Lentze has been discovered near Cincinnati. It has hung for years in the parlor of a country residence, and its owner has been in complete ignorance of its great value. It represents Braddock's defeat. The supposed time is just before the final rout. The English troops are crowded into a valley, and are firing at random into the thickets. On the right, Washington, with a small squad of soldiers, is managing a howitzer. The only Indian visible stands high on a rock, with a look of conscious triumph on his face. The hiding-places of his comrades are marked by the puffs of white smoke from their guns. The picture is said to be one of the finest battle-pieces extant. It is to be exhibited soon.

The London Times notices the existence in England of a sect of sun-worshipers. At the hour of dawn, on every 21st day of June, about three dozen persons gather at Stonehenge and perform mysterious rites in honor of the "God of Day." We might pardon a person who knows that the sun is the source of all the life and most of the motion on this earth, for reverting such a mighty power and imagining a governing spirit within it. Probably, however, the people who kneel, once a year, at Stonehenge, know about as much about the real nature of their gods as their prototypes, the Parsee sun-worshipers, did.

A strange political tangle now exists in the Twenty-third Congressional District of Pennsylvania. In that State, nominations are made by conferees, each county having an equal number. That district is composed of Butler, Armstrong, and part of Allegheny Counties. The Republican candidates at the meetings of the conferees each receive 3 votes, each county having a candidate. For seven weeks they have been trying to nominate without success. The trouble is, that each county demands the candidate as the only means of preventing the county giving a majority for Greeley.

Mr. Draper, Director of the Central Park Observatory, tries to refute, in his annual report, the idea that clearing away woods diminishes the rain-fall. He admits, however, that it tends to the drying of moist lands and the extinction of springs. Inasmuch as these results will inevitably diminish the rain-fall, Mr. Draper seems to have been superbly successful in disproving his own theory.

J. T. Mahorney, a colored citizen of Indianapolis, supports Greeley and Brown. Worse than this, he argues for them, and has convicted several negroes who dared to think for themselves. A few nights ago, some roughs of his own race assaulted him with stones and clubs. Secretary Boutwell's Ku-Klux are working with a gratifying rapidity. If their leader would only repeat in the North his incendiary speeches in the South, he might cause as many riots and attempts to murder here as he did there.

POLITICAL.

Robert Stewart, of Madison County, New York, one of the Grant Electors in 1868, has announced his intention to support Greeley.

—The Administration men at New Orleans "can't recommend any one to fill Casey's place." In other words, they can't find another such rascal who will step into their hands.

—A correspondent writes to the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial:

Senator Conkling, in his Cooper Institute speech last Monday night, boasts of his eleven years' service in Congress, and his intimate acquaintance with public men, and, by way of proof of the accuracy of his knowledge, says: "If among them all there is one, living or dead, who never knowingly failed in his duty, that one was Ulysses Sidney Grant. There was a forecast in giving him the name of Sidney, for his greatest, grandest quality, is his magnanimity." Can much reliance be placed in the historical accuracy of the Senator, who so mistakes a name that has so often been before the country as that of Ulysses Simpson Grant.

—The New Orleans Picayune, which could not abide Greeley, and suggested Mr. Bryant for the Presidency, has gone at last with the tide for Greeley and Brown.

—If the people of this country should make up their minds to forget that there had been a bloody war, and conclude to live at peace, it would be a terrible thing, and might throw a great many useful people out of office. The friends of General Grant are determined that no such calamity shall befall us.

—James Lewis (colored), the Republican candidate for Congress-at-large in Louisiana, was in past days a river character, and once served as steward on the steamer De Soto. Early in the late war he did duty as a servant for Lieutenant B. F. Hodge, of Shreveport, La., who was once a member of Congress, and afterward was a soldier in Dreanx's Battalion in Virginia.

—In despair of finding a Grant scrap-book where to desperate Tools and Chronicles resorted, has any record of the City Ballet Corps or Horses. The vote includes, of course, the Janitor's office, the colored employes, &c. Then what expedients were driven to, in order to swell the total! Item is displayed under flaming headlines! Such a display of Liberal strength among a crowd of Republican officeholders is not bad either.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

—In answer to questions: There were three members of Grant's Cabinet as first appointed who had made him presents, Stewart, Borie, and Hoar. Stewart's givings are well known. Borie had contributed to the Philadelphia house, and Hoar to the library presented to the President by citizens of Massachusetts. And Daniel Butterfield, who was appointed to the Sub-Treasury in New York, and driven from office by the Black Friday exposure, was the man who got up the New York subscription of $105,000 for Grant, while Grinnell, appointed Collector, was one of the subscribers.

—Harper's Weekly makes the observation discovery, which will be greatly gratifying, no doubt, to all Government clerks, that civil service rules do not absolutely prohibit assessments for political purposes, but simply remove the matter from the Heads of Departments, and place it in control of the National Republican Committee. If the Committee choose to assess, the President cannot help it; nor is it likely that he would help it if he could.

PERSONAL.

Bishop Bayley, of Newark, is to be Archbishop of Baltimore, if report is true.

—Senator Thurman, of Ohio, has accompanied an invalid daughter to the seaside, but in a few weeks will take the stump.

—Benjamin Huger, aged 12 years, son of Colonel A. A. Gibson, U. S. A., was drowned at Gorham, N. H., on Tuesday.

—The Rev. E. H. Griffin succeeds Professor Carter in the Chair of Latin at Williams College, not Professor Hopkins, as we heretofore stated.

—James F. Joy, Esq., the Railroad King of the West, is, with his family, at Rocky Point, R. I., for the season.

—The Rev. Kenneth H. Campbell, pastor of the Baptist Church in Mill Village, Dedham, Mass., is accused of bastardy.

—Ida Wilson, nee Lewis, the "Grace Darling of America," still makes Newport her home, and can often be seen in the harbor managing her beautiful boat. Notwithstanding the fact that she has taken into herself [illegible] she is to be called "Ida Lewis" as of yore.

—John Potts, the lately deceased Chief Clerk of the War Department, had been 26 years in the service, and for more than 20 years Chief Clerk; and Stanton was wont to speak of him as "perfectly incorruptible." His wife and daughter are in Europe, Miss Potts being engaged in marriage to a Russian gentleman now at St. Petersburg. He has two sons, one in the army, and the other in the navy.

—Henry M. Brent, United States Charge d'Affairs in Peru, was recently married to Michaela Delgado Moreno, of one of the oldest and most influential families in Peru. The ceremony was honored with the presence of President Balta's Cabinet, the Diplomatic Corps resident in Lima, the chief officers of the American navy in Callao, and the most select of the Lima society.

Three Grievances.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

SIR: The undersigned, one of Chicago's oldest citizens, respectfully requests leave, through the columns of your paper, to prefer to the City Fathers three very modest, but withal, seriously-in-earnest complaints. The street in which I live (Carpenter) is beset by three as big nuisances in their way as ever drove a good, pious, church-going Christian to the brink of demoralization.

Grievance No. 1. The trains are legally allowed but six minutes, consecutively, to blockade a given street crossing. Yet I positively affirm that I am only one of several dozen who waste every day, at the Kinzie street crossing, upwards of twenty precious minutes, during which we stand staring, appealingly, pathetically, remonstratingly, coaxingly, indignantly, at some confounded train which runs backward and forward in an uncertain manner, "as if it didn't know its own mind" (as the old maid on the steamboat said of the man at the wheel). You determine you'll wait no longer. The awful consciousness of a cold supper hangs over your devoted head, and you start briskly down the track for the "go" of "going around" the train. You have passed half the distance, and are chuckling to yourself at the coon-dodge you're playing on your annoyer. But your enemy was watching you, and immediately decides to go in the same direction, and, accordingly, the bigger half of the train reaches and passes the point you intended to cross at just 3 seconds in advance of you, and stands spread out before you as before. Back you go to the former point,—and back goes the train. I have played that silly game with the cars for half an hour at a time. Some desperate men swing over and cross under the cars, (children, too, weak of all). If there is a law for the protection of our crossings, I beg that it be enforced—if only at meal-times.

Grievance No 2. Between Indiana street and Kinzie street, along the outer edge of the sidewalk, are often to be seen, early in the morning, sundry barrels of refuse-matter awaiting the scavenger. If this sort of thing must be, why not cause the scavenger to come somewhat earlier on his rounds? Or is it doesn't need to be over-sensitive to feel that every breath he draws in, in passing the locality, is freighted with cholera, or something worse.

Grievance No. 3. Sometimes, when the nights are very dark, we have no lamp-light about here whatever. Often at night, persons whose business it is to light up the street, get around in the neighborhood of half-past 8 or 9 o'clock. Oftener still, boys who have exhausted every other species of amusement, hit upon the bright expedient of climbing up the lamp-post and turning off the gas completely. I think our lamps should not be tampered with in that way. As it now stands, any gang of garroters or house-breakers can have the lights turned out in whatever locality they want to ply their avocation in. I protest.

White Hats and White Coats.

To the Editor of The Chicago Tribune:

SIR: The Order of "White Hats" was a Democratic Society in the Netherlands in 1377, that numbered thousands. They were leaders of Republicanism against an Aristocracy,—the Commons against the Nobles,—the war lasting from William the Senseless, 1358, to the death of Charles le Mauvais 1387.

The Order of "White Coats" in 1296 was composed of ancient Britain, near the Carmelites, or White Friars, of 1540; was a Society of English and French, in 1296, to preserve the national independence of the Pope and English Churches against the Italian Papacy. The truce of twenty-eight years between France and England, and the law of primates under Richard II., are identified with it. The Gallican liberties and the ancient independence of Ecclesia Anglicana, owe something to the "White Coats."

Why might not such a costume help to win against Ulysses the Stupid, and the Monopolist party? Two suits to consolidate all power in themselves, and overthrow the rights of States, and make a Monarchy of the Republic?

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL.

Doings at the Theatres Last Week—How Bloomfield Might be Improved—The Sentimentalists who Patronize "Enoch Arden"—Shoddy about Amusements Elsewhere than Chicago—Miss Kellogg in London.

The amusements of the past week are not very suggestive of criticism. The extreme heats of the summer solstice seem to have passed, and the attendance at the new theatres left open has generally increased in numbers. Larger audiences have witnessed the performances at the Academy of Music and the Globe Theatre, but fewer persons have visited the amphitheatre on Clinton street, although Mr. Foster has kept his show up to the original standard. A "three weeks' stay" is now a little more than the public were at first led to expect from the advertisements which mildly intimated that the kaleidoscopic manager, his dancers, his singers, and his many humorists of infinite jest were in active demand elsewhere. Mr. Foster inclines a little too much toward the fallacy of "last nights" and "final appearances." We are not at all surprised to learn that his varied show will delight the public for another week, and that some new features will be presented. One of the most remarkable features of the late performances has been a contortionist known upon the bills as Herr Willis, a contortionist of extraordinary elasticity of person, who successfully attempted feats never before seen in the city. As such things, however, possess little charm to the sense of touch, we refrain from a more descriptive allusion to his acts. The programme of the present week will be considerably changed, and will have its customary variety, with something for almost every taste. The amphitheatre will be given up again to the pleasures of the ring next week. Chiarini's Royal Italian Circus is coming, which is said to have many things that will please the lovers of light entertainment. The equestrian and gymnastic performances are vouched for. Bonza and Theodore Cuno, Ethiopian pupils of Signor Chiarini, are mentioned as special attractions.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The name of Mr. Edwin Adams, and the play which he now makes a specialty, have proved sufficient to fill the Academy of Music at nearly every performance during the week. The drama itself is far from Shakspearean, yet its elevated words and the simple truth and goodness of its characters raise it into the realm of the "legitimate," in a relative sense. Any true-hearted woman might in real life, have played the part of Annie Lisle, and many others, less assertive than she, have done all that is attributed to Paisley Ray but circumstances favored. None of the characters have the objectionable features which, in the memory, her peculiarities of word, look, tone, or gesture which raise them above the flat, prosaic plane of real life. The writer of the play never gave his few personages unique qualities, and the playwright has not ventured to add new incidents to the old. Nevertheless, the few new incidents interpolated, but these were necessary to give the semblance of a plot and a livelier interest to the parlor scenes of the drama of "Enoch Arden," then, is a mere series of generous monologues, to which true love and sympathy lend an interest. The charm is to lend an indulgent auditory never above the average in intelligence, and to make it a study in appreciating ear, and manipulates a ready handkerchief, when constancy is the subject of the story of the fair Annie Lisle and her fallen fall. Like the scattering rain-drops that precede a summer shower, but when Enoch Arden narrates his adventures on the desert isle, the copiousness of seltzer-water from a siphon-bottle. Mr. Adams deserves credit for having made the play so interesting. He has put much upon the stage. His pleasant voice,—now showing the effect of over use,—his easy and graceful manner, and, more than all the natural sincerity with which he assumes the leading part, and enters into inadherent moods, have all contributed to this end. But, as it is not a play of Annie Lisle, and Enoch Arden, and others that might be specified, he would be guilty of something very like an error in allowing his sympathies to run away with his better judgment. To the interest which Mr. Adams has lent to the play has been added, the week, the very pleasing performance by Miss Lydia Dwelin, and that of Phatsy Ray, by Mr. Evans. The scenery has also been fresh and pretty. The illusion of the island and the sea, and the sail boat in the distance was good, the English landscapes fair if cute, and the glimpse through the window of the cottage, looking out upon the wilderness looking, like a lost angel in ought too gates of paradise, quite charming. The play will be continued during the week, and, from the audiences, fresh to city life, and above to human woes, will successively shed their tears over its mimic sorrows.

GLOBE THEATRE.

Minstrelsy having long since become a legitimate branch of the entertainments of the day, it has a right that its representatives should conform to certain just laws which regulate it. There are two extremes to be avoided, which we may say briefly that they comprise vocal and instrumental excellence, special adaptation to general taste, and a decent regard to the proprieties of the respectable class of people who pay their money for and attend the theatre to be amused. Hooley's minstrels, a large and well appointed company, comprising thirty members, have been performing to the best houses at the Globe Theatre during the past week to tolerably full houses. The troupe embodies considerable talent in the singing line, and are generally agreeable singers, and their combined efforts are harmonious and acceptable. The instrumental portion of the performance is not Hunnesmal, and are reasonably disciplined. There is not a large amount of dancing, but what there is of it is good. The jokes are neither new nor somewhat earlier on his rounds? One doesn't need to be over-sensitive to feel that every breath he draws in, in passing the locality, is freighted with cholera, or something worse.

Grievance No. 3. Sometimes, when the nights are very dark, we have no lamp-light about here whatever. Often at night, persons whose business it is to light up the street, get around in the neighborhood of half-past 8 or 9 o'clock. Oftener still, boys who have exhausted every other species of amusement, hit upon the bright expedient of climbing up the lamp-post and turning off the gas completely. THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

In the August number, the "Story of Septimius Felton" is finished, and subscribed with the magic signature, "Nathaniel Hawthorne." There comes with its conclusion a sense that over the unavailing regret that the finishing touches could not have been given to it ere the hand of the master grew cold. Rose Garfield is married to Robert Hegburn in the final chapter. The "elixir of life" proves to be a rank poison, in whose making Sibyl Dacy has conspired with hatred to Septimius, and assisted by Ariosakan. On the wedding night of Garfield, Sibyl drinks a portion of the potion, and upon the dead body of her enemy shatters the vase that no one else may be injured, and dies. Septimius soon after goes to England, where he recovers his patrimonial estate. Dr. Portsoken is tried for murder, but escapes, much like a murderer of the present day, because no proof against him can be found. It will comfort constitutional physiognomists to observe that throughout this long work, published by a house priding itself on its immaculate correctness, the name "Sibyl" (Greek Sibylla) should have uniformly been spelled "Sybil."

The remainder of the magazine possesses the usual ability. Parson Brownson's conscientious assessment of his historico-biographical sketches, entitled "Jefferson, Governor of Virginia." There are clever poems by John Hay and J. S. Trowbridge, and other poetry without much excellence. John A. Bolles, James DeMille, Hiram Rich, Mrs. J. L. Hallowell, and Oliver Wendell Holmes fill out the quota. In Dr. Holmes' "Poet at the Breakfast-Table" there's "richness." We append a few brief quotations:

I wish the reader to observe that I treasure up with interest all the words uttered by the Salesman. It must have been noticed that he very rarely speaks, perhaps he has an inner life, with its own deep emotional, and lofty contemplative elements, but as we see him, he is the boarder reduced to the simplest expression of that term. Yet, like monk Lubin, he has human creatures and specific characters not unworthy of being studied. I notice particularly a certain electrical briskness of movement, such as one may see in the squirrel, which clearly belongs to his calling. The dry-goodsman's life behind his counter is a succession of sudden, snappy perceptions and brief series of once-articulated speech, as thus:

"Purple calico, three-quarters wide, six yards."

Up goes the arm; bang! tumbles out the flat roll and turns half a dozen somersets, as if for the fun of the thing; the six yards of calico hurry over the measuring-nails, bunching their backs up as if they were creatures, and not inanimate things; snip, scratch, rip! the scissors is wisped up, brown-paper'd, tied, labelled, delivered, and the man is bowing to the next customer, all in a little convulsion-fit. Think of a man having some hundreds of these semi epileptic seizures every day, and you need not wonder that he does not say much; these fits take the talk all out of him.

But because he, or any other man, does not say much, it does not follow that he may not have, as I have said, an exalted and poetical inner life. I have known a number of cases where a man who seemed thoroughly common-place and anemotional has all at once surprised everybody by telling the price of his hideous life far more politely and dramatically than any play-wright or novelist or poet could have told it for him. I will not insult your intelligence, Beloved, by saying that the Salesman has not a poetical nature.

Well, I must give you a copy of it. My book and I are pretty much the same thing. Sometimes I steal from my book in my talk; sometimes, I suppose, when I say a wise thing myself, "O, that won't do; everybody has read my book and knows it by heart." And then the other I says,—you know people's brains that nobody seems to care for. Look here.

He took down a Greek Lexicon finely bound in calf, and spread it open.

Do you see that Hedericus? had Greek dictionaries enough, and to spare, but I have that noble quarto lying in the midst of an ignoble crowd of cheap books, and marked at a price which I felt to be an insult to authorship, to the memory of Homer, to me and the awful shade of Aeschylus. I paid the mean price asked for it, and I wanted to double it, but I suppose it would have been a breach of faith on the part of both of us. I love that book for its looks and behavior. None of your "half-calf" economies in that volume, sir! And see how it lies open anywhere! Thereinto's a book in my library that has such a generous way of laying its treasures before you. From Alpha to Omega, calm, assured rest at any page that your choice or caprice may light on. No lifting of a reluctant lash lest it should betray secrets that does not know his place and can never be brought into manners, but tranquil, well-bred repose. A book may be a perfect gentleman in all respects of demeanor, and this book would be good company for personages like Roger Ascham and his pupils, the Lady Elizabeth and the Lady Jane Grey.

Ah, the saddle-worm is the larva of a fly, and he makes a case for himself out of all sorts of bits of everything that happen to suit his particular fancy, dead or alive, from straws and stones and small sticks with their leaves in 'em, living as comfortable as ever. Every one of these paddies carries home his special fancy as to what he will pick up and live together, with a kind of natural contempt he provides himself, to make his case of. THE GREAT ENTERTAINMENT patronized by the nobility and higher classes more than any other. This fact necessitates various peculiar arrangements in the interior of the opera houses, in order to keep the aristocracy in that privileged seclusion so dear to them. In the first place, there are separate entrances for the various parts of the theatre; and those parts which are cheap, and are consequently full of plebeians, are most carefully separated from the rest. Then the prices are made very high, so that it is entirely out of the reach of any but the wealthy classes to attend while the season lasts. Moreover, full dress is absolutely required in the aristocratic parts of the theatre, and a gentleman would not be admitted into the box-parquet, or dress-circle, unless in a full dress suit, nor a lady with a bonnet or hat on. One would think that the appearance of the audience would be very brilliant, but it is not particularly so, owing to the want of sufficient light, and to the rather dingy appearance of the paper on the walls of the boxes, and of the various trimmings and furniture. It requires some experience to get tickets for the opera here without being imposed upon.

THE BUSINESS OF SWINDLING

is well understood, and carried to great perfection in England. We have speculators at home, who buy opera tickets and sell them at an advanced price; but I am not aware of ever having seen a company of such speculators deliberately hire a room in the immediate neighborhood of the theatre, hang out a sign bearing upon it the words "Box-office," which sign is brilliantly illuminated at night, and profess to be the regular box-office of the theatre. Yet this is the case here, and these men must do a very profitable business in buying tickets, and selling them at half as much again to those who are ignorant of the localities and the proper places to secure seats. The cabmen seem to have a fellow-feeling with these rascals, probably because they must sympathize with every variety of cheating, and, if a stranger asks to be driven to the box-office of the theatre, they are just as likely as not to drive him here. However, if tickets are purchased at the right place, the price for them considering the very high order of entertainment to which they admit you. The best seats may be had for a guinea,—that is, about five dollars apiece,—not at all higher than they are in America when any great prima donna is to sing; and here they give all least the money's worth in the wonderful amount of talent they put upon the stage at once, and the extreme perfection with which the orchestra, and chorus, and all the scenic arts are managed. No trouble is spared here to make the entertainment as perfect as it can possibly be; and I doubt if opera is so thoroughly well rendered anywhere else in the world. When a musical man goes to hear opera in America, he expects to hear one, or perhaps two, singers of the first order of merit, and to be bored, if not positively pained, all the rest, while the choruses are rarely aggurate and effective, and the orchestra often very weak. Not so here. I hardly ever heard "Martha" performed here the other night, with the five principal parts filled by artists of the greatest force, and three of them,—Nilsson, Campanini, and Trebelli-Bettini,—the foremost soprano, tenor, and contralto singers now on the stage. The chorus was almost perfect, and the orchestra, consisting of 75 or 80 pieces, played with wonderfully well handled. It was a rare treat, indeed.

IS NOT EXORBITANT,

AND SO IT IS ALWAYS.

There are no poor performances redeemed by the occasional brilliant singing of a solitary star, but all principal parts are taken by real artists, while all the subordinate work of the opera is evenly and carefully done. The ballet in "Martha" music is very remarkable. A chorus of old men will sing in rather a weak and feeble voice, keeping the pitch accurately, however, while the chorus of young men will have a body and force of volume which make the building ring. All the orchestra music is played with great expression, accuracy, and flexibility. Though the leader's baton is plied, it is thoroughly under control, and is never allowed to interfere with and drown the voices of the singers, as is too often the case even with the small orchestras in America. The scenery is very beautiful,—all effects of light, such as moonlight for instance, being particularly well managed. In the garden scene in "Faust," which is of so much importance, I never saw so natural and beautiful a representation of moonlight upon the stage. In the scenes at the fair, in "Martha," Lionel and Plunkett are driven on to the stage in a veritable wagon with a veritable horse harnessed to it, and when they carry Martha and Nancy to their homes, they go off on a veritable truck, the same wagon. These are little things, but they add to the general beauty of the performance, and show with what care every detail in attended to. That nothing is wanting may be wanting to produce the best possible effect.

Altogether, one who is fond of music should come here during the season of opera, for he will have a treat such and will not be likely soon to forget. We have had the very finest singers in America, but we never had any such support for them; nor have operas ever shown, so far as I know, nearly such musical completeness and finish.

Such, then, is the general character of the opera here. Perhaps it would interest your readers to know who are on the London stage this year, and what their prominent characteristics are. The principal soprano singers are Madame Adelina Patti, Madame Parepa-Rosa, Miss Kellogg, Mlle. Marie Marimon, Mlle. Titiens, and Mlle. Nilsson. All of these are prima donnas of the highest order, and fit to rank with any in the world.

OF PAREPA AND MISS KELLOGG,

I will not speak. They are both well known in America, and have won well-deserved laurels in all of our principal cities. The latter, however, does not appear to good advantage here. Her voice, though clear and true, is rather light, and sounds somewhat weak when compared with any one of the others.

MLLE. MARIMON

is a young singer, and has wonderful capabilities, as it seems to me. Her voice is the most flexible I ever heard, and, for singing brilliant music, such as the lighter compositions of Balfe, Bellini, and Donizetti, she is without a superior. She has been received here with the utmost enthusiasm, and it seems likely that a brilliant career is in store for her. There is a defect in her voice, it is a certain lack of tenderness and sweetness. There is, perhaps, rather too much show and too little soul in her music.

MLLE. TITIENS,

it is hard to say too much. She has a grand, pure soprano, of very much the same quality as Parepa's, but even more powerful, and her execution is very brilliant, and absolutely faultless as to time and pitch. As a more singer, it seems to me that she stands at the head; at all events, none of the others are superior to her in power, brilliancy, and accuracy. Her great defect as an opera-singer is in her appearance, and her entire want of dramatic power. She is an extremely large woman, larger than I should think, than Parepa; and she has all the stock attitudes and conventional gestures of the operatic stage, and her singing is destitute of all vivacity and action. These defects lessen very materially the effect this gifted singer produces in opera, but in concert she is glorious, and rarely fails to carry off the palm from all competitors.

The peculiar characteristic of

is the extreme beauty and power of its lower register, which, for a soprano, is very remarkable. There is a richness and tenderness about these tones which is very touching. Her upper register is also beautiful, though not so wonderful as the lower; and her singing is artistic, and in a simple and unaffected style. Add to these charms a pretty face and figure, and sprightly, natural grace in acting, and you have the material for a very popular opera singer, and such Patti certainly is. There is no other soprano on the stage here now who draws such crowds as she does, excepting Nilsson.

And now comes

greatest of all. In judging of an opera-singer not only singing is to be taken into consideration, but also dramatic power, and over personal appearance. If there is no need of fine acting in opera, why have acting at all? Why not dispense with the scenery, and have the singers and chorus sit upon chairs and sing the music through? I say this because I have heard musical men say of Nilsson that her power was not wholly in her voice, but also in her wonderful acting and extreme beauty. This is undoubtedly true, to a certain extent; but that is no discredit to her, as it seems to be considered by some, but it rather shows her extraordinary genius to be able to equal the first artists in the world in singing. And her surpass any of them in the force and intensity of her acting. In the first place, her voice, though not so powerful as Parepa's or Titiens', is as pure and sweet as mountain-stream, and overflows with deep pathos and touching tenderness. Her execution is brilliant and correct, and her method of singing faultlessly artistic. Then she has also the presence and dignity of a queen, the rarest beauty, and the most perfect grace. If she sings of love, her voice, her look, her whole form, is all-eloquent with passion. If she is suffering, her voice is full of tears, and every movement tells its story of sadness. If she would supplicate, she kneels, she puts her whole soul into her voice, and her beseeching glances would melt a heart of stone. Who that has heard her sing the love-music in the garden scene in "Faust" did not feel that it was the very poetry of passion, as true to Nature as it is to Art? Who can her hear sing the last act of "Traviata," and withstand the exquisite pathos of her voice and acting? Or the wedding scene in "Lucia," and not be thrilled by its intensity and force? Nilsson is not merely a singer; she is a poetess. Her music has in it a soul and a meaning. The largest house I ever arrived in, to be true to the ideas she has of her part. To one who really appreciates her, and feels that deep, soul-stirring power in her voice, it does not seem strange that her audiences should be driven almost home from admirers by her entire want of dramatic power. She is an extremely large woman, larger than I should think, than Parepa; and she has all the stock attitudes and conventional gestures of the operatic stage, and her singing is destitute of all vivacity and action. These defects lessen very materially the effect this gifted singer produces in opera, but in concert she is glorious, and rarely fails to carry off the palm from all competitors.

that stretch for 400 miles between Missouri River, westward to the Rocky Mountains, and sweep from far North the Canadas to the Gulf of Mexico. There is something singularly oppressive in this dead level of nascent soil, this bare and limitless waste, with the ocean's broad expanse, but without the ocean's suggestion of variety and power. It is Nature in inevitable repose, without the energy to put forth an effort. Here and there, at long, distant intervals, a clump of trees rests the tired eyes, like a oasis in the desert. Even the fields of scrubby sunflower have a homelike, friendly look, with a certain air of luxuriance among the scanty vegetation; and the low cactus rears its prickly head in bold relief from the short, pale grass, which is shaded all over with patches of deeper green, that lie scattered around like cloud-shadows at rest. An enthusiastic botanist brought in a species of Euphorbia that grows in great profusion, and stones for its clumsy leaves and stalk by a leafy flower of pale green, delicately streaked with white. There is a faint sprinkling of coarse white and yellow flowers, but you see none of the finer tints that suprise you in mountain-nooks and sheltered valleys. It seems as if Nature loved to hide away her choicest treasures, and keep them for those who search best in remote and half-inaccessible recesses.

When we were tired of gazing into space, and looking for flowers that a swift glance could not define, we amused ourselves by watching for little colonies of prairie-dogs that line the road. Startled by our approach, the shy, swift creatures, ran by dozens toward their holes, sitting down when them, and holding up their heads like a squirrel, apparently feeling quite secure so long as their coverts were near. They do not look much larger than a good-sized Chicago rat, though the rapid glance may have given an incorrect impression of their relative size, which is much smaller than I had imagined. They are active as mice, and never sit still. As civilized seeds and plants, which, of course, seals their final doom, although, at present, their day of grace holds fair to be a long one. I saw several owls scattered beside their hiding-places; but, whether for companionship or destruction, I cannot say. The third traditional member of the happy family was not to be seen. The amiable rattlesnake was either too small to be visible, or true to his reputation. As the time has not come for the lion and lamb to lie down together, I am afraid that the former has been indicted for the singular group must be treated as a myth, especially as the treacherous snake has been known to manifest his extraordinary friendship in the presence of what incontrollable manner of swallowing dodily the infant dog it ought to protect, as it came out to take the morning air.

We caught a glimpse of a solitary antelope, but it bounded away out of sight like a flash. We had imagined innumerable buffaloes all day, in the distant herds of Texas cattle that belong here in a wild, half-tamed, and full, and well adapted to the execution of light and brilliant music. In such a part as Zerlina in "Fra Diavolo," or Rosina in "The Barber," I should think she would be very charming; but neither her vocal nor her dramatic powers seemed to me equal to the requirements of Marguerite, which is the only part in which I have seen her.

I have said so much of the soprano that I have left but little room for the rest, though they all amply deserve mention.

MME. TREBELLI-BETTINI

has by far the finest mezzo voice I ever heard, and I think she has no superior. The quality of the voice much resembles that of a clarinet. It is as clear, sound, and resonant as the low tones of that instrument. Her acting is full of power, and her appearance prepossessing. She is the only one of all the singers here whom I would compare with Nilsson in the stage, and I doubt if she could easily be said which of these two great singers was the superior. For my own part, I would prefer Nilsson; but any one who likes the low tones of the clarinet, as I dare say, to Trobelli-Bettini. As Azucena in "Trovatore," Trebelli-Bellini is entirely unequalled, and I scarcely believed it possible that so much dramatic intensity, as well as musical beauty, could be given to this part.

MME. ALBONI AND MLLE. SCALCI

are also prime donne of the popular sale singers; but neither of them compares at all with Trebelli-Bettini.

CAMPANINI.

Of tenors there is also a rich supply. Fancelli, Nicolini, Capoul, and Campanini, are the greatest; and, though all are excellent, the last is far ahead, not only of any other tenor here, but of any I have ever heard in any opera. He is a native of Parma, Italy. His voice is wonderfully sweet, far sweeter and more touching than ever Brignoli's was,—and yet is possessed of great power and compass. Like most artists, he never overwork his voice, or indulge in any show-passages, and is cautious about too many holds in the very highest notes. If he has a fault, it is the occasional use of the falsetto, and a tendency to rather too much pianissimo singing, to which he is tempted by the extraordinary sweetness and evenness of his voice. More beautiful music than the duet between him and Trebelli-Bettini—the "Si la stanchezza" from "Trovatore"—could hardly be imagined, and to the audience was fairly ravished by it.

The baritones and basses are not at all behind the others in excellence, and that I do not mention them is only because I have no space.

a French singer, is considered the finest Mephistopheles who has ever appeared, and though, in profundity of voice, he does not equal Hermanns, in the power of his acting he seems to me to excel all singers whom I have ever heard attempt this part.

Altogether, there is a wonderful amount of talent here, and one who is fond of music can never forget the opera in London, if he has been so fortunate as to hear it.

IN THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS.

I.

From Our Own Correspondent.

DENVER, July 13.

Blessings on the man who invented palace cars, and thought of the little human weaknesses for being comfortable! You can go out for an airing of 1,100 miles or so, and fancy yourself sitting all the while in your own drawing-room, with the added privilege of making harmless observations upon your unsuspecting fellow-mortals, and seeing the world at the moderate rate of twenty miles an hour. And, better than all, you can preserve your serenity and your illusions, and, in spite of heat and dust, see the country, as well as your neighbors, couleur de rose.

We left Chicago with the thermometer somewhere among the nineties, prepared for no end of discomforts, and hastily made sundry visions of tropical suns pouring down upon desert wastes, and night-rides vividly suggestive of the Black-Hole of Calcutta, pleasantly or unpleasantly varied with tired speculations as to the lung-capacity of slumberous humanity, and the best methods of making a noisy breathing-apparatus run smoothly. But the tropical suns proved to be softly tempered; the night air was balmy, and not at all suggestive of the above-mentioned disagreeable place; and humanity, for once, slumbered silently. Not even a restless infant uttered a cry, and only the moonlight, touching lake and prairie, village and farmhouse, into dreamy life, charmed away our sleep, as we whirled away from the dear old Lake.

The late morning found us among the green fields and sparsely-settled districts of Missouri. From an esthetic standpoint the country after leaving the more cultivated vicinity of the Missisippi River, is flat and uninteresting. The monotony is not even relieved by the neat, tasteful cottages, and well-kept gardens that follow usually the finer currents of civilization. The traces of the old system, that left a blight upon everything it touched, have not yet passed away. There is still an air of unthrifty age in the scattered villages and dingy, desolate farmhouses and, just now, vegetation has a wilted look, as if it were suffering from heat or drouth. But the practical eye might find a more substantial interest in the vast pasture-lands, sprinkled with the inevitable white flowers, and plentifully dashed with yellow; in the golden harvest-fields, dotted over with shocks of unstacked grain; and the magnificent possibilities of wealth lying latent in the rich soil.

As we approach the Missouri River, small grains grow scarcer, and the immense fields of waving corn, that stretch away as far as the eye can reach, indicate a rich stock-raising country. Vegetation is fresher, too, with recent rains; the trees grow more luxuriantly; and there is a darker wealth of tangled undergrowth along the streams. There are more signs, too, of thrift and New England thrift in the snug farm houses and grow orchards.

We had been interested all day in the novel appearance of two veritable Highland Scotch Highlanders, clad from head to foot in the picturesque costume that seems to belong only to the Scotch hills, and speaking the broad dialect of the clover in their own tongue. The romance and romance of a generation or two ago. They were rare specimens of the grand physique that is the especial inheritance of bold mountain-roads, but seems to die out before the luxuries and refinements of an old civilization. As they left the train, in the heart of this young country, I could not help wondering if the world never pine for the bracing Scotch air, and the gray hills that have been consecrated by centuries of romantic legend and wild adventure.

A hurried visit to Kansas City by moonlight gave us only a vague impression of a thriving city scattered over picturesque and broken bluffs, with the broad river flowing like a lake at their feet, and the lights of Wyandotte gleaming a mile or two away. We passed the garden of Kansas in the night, but daylight found us still in a country that has suffered us with its signs of wealth and rapid growth. It is difficult to conceive of the bloody scenes that stained its peaceful cities and smiling plains, so short a time ago. The footprints of war seem to be quite effaced, and I could easily fancy myself among New England homes, with the rugged hills levelled into gentle undulations, and the wild-kept fields of corn, and grain, and pasture, indefinitely multiplied and expanded.

A little more than 200 miles west of the Missouri River, we strike the luminous plains

Uninviting Appearance of the Noted Watering-Place.

Bathing in the Surf—How Business-Men Visit the "Branch."

The Hotels—"Uncle" Daniel Drew—Henry Wilson—Prevalence of Greeleyism.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONG BRANCH, July 25.

An unpleasant, drizzling rain had lulled me into Dreamland, while the train was speeding toward the summer-home of New York aristocracy, when a respectable thump suddenly recalled me to the land of realities, and the hoarse cry of "Long Branch!" announced my arrival at my destination.

I had been wearing romances in my mind concerning the "Branch," and had pictured it to myself in color highly flattering to the proprietors of its hotels and cottages, who, as I supposed, had united to beautify the resort of the many people who make this place their summer residence.

Terribly was I punished, however, for thus allowing my mind to wander into the realms of imagination, the first sight that met my view was a the monotony of whose whiteness was occasionally relieved by little green pigeon-holes, that were evidently meant for windows. Between those smooth buildings, that I afterwards discovered were the hotels, appeared a stretch of sickly-looking grass that evidently tried to be up to the times, could be seen,—some with the usual sign, "For Sale," tacked to the cheap fence that separated them from neighbors that were out of the market, and whose pretensions to aristocracy were the possession of little wooden structures, that showed neither taste nor elegance in their construction.

I pondered solemnly over the contrast between romance and reality that was here painfully illustrated, and vowed never again to allow myself to indulge in mental speculations on the charms of an American watering-place.

Two hours later, I was safely ensconced within one of the very buildings that had appeared to me, in the distance, like a wooden prison, and endeavored, at last with success, to convince myself that the 6 by 8 parlor and bedroom combined, that I occupied, was not a cell, in which I was to do penance for having Greeley.

Long Branch, as I have now discovered, does not pretend to be a fashionable resort, like Saratoga, or the other one of New York, a dozen or more villages, situated, like it, on the banks of the ocean. Its only claim on suffering humanity is for the that extends for more than a mile, and invites old and young alike to disport in its refreshing embrace. At different times of the day, according to the various bathing, of different pretensions, can be seen uniting in one great object, and forgetting, for a time at least the difference of station or wealth that separates them on other days. The hotels of bathers, where one person grasps the hand of his neighbor, the aristocratic lady of Fifth Avenue often takes that of the girl who waits on her at the hotel, and the bedizened snob, now transformed into something like a human being, for once in his life, can strap the hand of an honest man, who, though his inferior in wealth, is still his superior in everything that makes man the image of God. As the heavy surf rolls over the whole number of bathers, and for a moment hides them from the sight of the looker-on, strange thoughts will arise in the thinking mind, as it reflects upon this side-scene of the twentieth century life.

The usual time for bathing is generally fixed by the bathers, each hotel having at least one, and several bathing men, of those most valuable of appendages of sea-bathing. Few accidents have occurred here, from rash bathing, or a desire of displaying fearlessness in presence of the assembled crowd; for the bathing men will not allow themselves to their duty, and a desire for the safety of their charges, remind the more reckless of their flock of the existence of danger, when at a proper distance from the shore.

That the ladies preponderate in bathing, may well be imagined; for the majority of men leave the Branch on the morning train for the city, and return in the evening, in far too cool to allow much indulging in wading in the surf.

The number of visitors is terminus here, has arranged its tripa very conveniently,—trains leaving at seasonable hours to carry men in the time to their pieces of business. Some of the more prosperous of these have bridged the Rocky Mountains and spanned the ocean.

Our preconceived ideas of a country almost without rain were somewhat shaken by a terrific storm in the middle of the night. Toward evening, the jagged lightning played among the dark, heavy masses of clouds in every direction, as if a myriad of colossal sky-rockets were being fired in every one of streams of liquid fire that illuminated the whole heavens. The rain fell in a dense, blinding sheet, dashing violently against the car-windows, and continuing up a din, that of possible bridges washed away, and rolling torrents where innocent streams ought to be. But it left us unharmed, with only a couple of hours' delay.

We arose very early the next morning, to catch the first view of the Rocky Mountains; but Nature was not in an amiable mood, and the lofty peaks provokingly hid their snowy heads behind a veil of impenetrable cloud. A little later, the white mist lifted, so as to reveal a single isolated peak,—falling again in a pale, faint chase, and finally from its swiftly curled into soft wreaths, and slowly dissolved into shining patches of ragged and floating vapor. It was the finest cloud-effect I have ever seen, and partially compensated for our disappointment in not beholding the mountains in a clear day. The season is said to be exceptional, and it has rained more or less ever since we reached Denver.

This morning, we started out on a very early hour, hoping to get a clearer view of the mountains. Far to the south, Pike's Peak was sharply defined against the morning sky, its summit crowned with a cloud of mystery, while, below, it was buried in shadows. More than one hundred and fifty miles north, Long's Peak lifted its white head towards the clouds, half-veiled in the soft haze, in which the peaks beyond faded and were lost. We found it utterly impossible to realize that the visible range extended more than three hundred miles, and the lowest foot-hills were fifteen miles away, and the snow-capped peaks seventy or eighty. But the infinite display of light and shadow, the endless variety of tints, the cold white crests suddenly touched by the sun into flashes of opalescent brightness,—all carried us off our feet each time; no poet could ever describe them.

I had fancied Denver lying in the shadow of the mountains, but I find it built upon an undulating plain, with the mountain range for a distant background. It is difficult to realize that we are already at an altitude of more than 5,000 feet, so gradual has been the ascent. It is equally difficult to realize that we are in a pioneer city of scarcely more than a dozen years' growth. It already has gas, and street cars, and water-works, and projected boulevards. The suburban hills are studded over with elegant and costly residences, and long lines of cottonwood give a speedy promise of future shade. The whole city has a general air of enterprise and maturity that would do credit to the growth of many years, and would seem almost incredible to one who was unfamiliar with the pluck and energy of the Western spirit. One finds, too, that ready courtesy and cordiality which make a stranger so soon at home in a new country.

The snows have been so heavy and the season so late, this year that trips into the mountains have been somewhat delayed, although the country is crowded with tourists. It seems as if we had stepped suddenly from July into November. It has been cold and stormy since we reached here. This afternoon, however, the sun is shining more warmly, when it has at all, although the very leaves seem hanging their leaden fringes over the mountains in mirrors this day. While I write, there is a dark cloud before me, with blue sky and sunshine on one side, and lightnings playing vividly upon the other. A little while ago I saw a curious effect, in another part of the heavens, of all the prismatic colors piled in a formless mass, as if the materials for a rainbow were lying there, but had not been made up. In a day or two we hope to go into the mountains, and get a nearer view of the grand and rugged mysteries that are so full of endless charm and fascination.

The Lost Boy.

The "Boston Traveller" thinks the following story a good illustration of the way a good many stripling in "jacket and trousers" miss their "bearings" and their wits:

The boy of a family, residing not far from Lagrange street, is a boy who has recently passed his 5th year, and having just donned his first jacket and trousers, is attending a primary school. The other afternoon he failed to come home at the usual hour, much to the alarm of the household, and after a long search he was found some time after dark, at the Providence depot.

He was sent to bed without much explanation, though it is possible that his treatment was what Solomon would have recommended in such an emergency.

The next morning he was down to the breakfast table, evidently in the best of health, and, perhaps the wiser. Taking advantage of a lull in the conversation instituted at the morning meal, he turned his grave countenance in the direction of the head of the table, and giving free vent to his overcharged mind, he exclaimed:

"I'll tell you, mamma, how it happened. After school I went part of the way home with Mary and Alice, and left the corner of a street where she lives. I kissed her, and she kissed me. For that I found I was lost."

There was an explosion round the table just about that time. It is suspected this is not the only young gentleman who has been lost under similar circumstances.

MONETARY AND COMMERCIAL.

MONETARY.

SATURDAY EVENING, July 27.

The past week has been a peculiarly quiet one in financial circles. Our local banks have had plenty of leisure to canvass the situation, and count up the probabilities of the future. Applications for loans have been exceedingly light, in proportion to the relatively large amounts of capital that are here just now awaiting employment, and, in consequence, discount rates have been easy to the right kind of borrowers, at 10 per cent per annum on time notes, and 7@8 per cent on call.

To-day was even more quiet than the average of the week; several of the banks reporting no applications either for discounts or exchange; and no demand from the country, while the receipts of paper are pressing lighter, and promise to be of the spare order for some time to come. Hence remittances to the country will probably be less in amount than the receipts from that source during next week.

Eastern Exchange was quiet to-day, but quoted firm at yesterday's rates, at 25@50c per $1,000 premium buying, and $1,000@1,500 premium selling. Gold was also quiet, and not far from 100 asked.

THE NORTH DIVISION.

Highly Important Meeting of Property-Owners.

An Improvement Association Organized and Capital Subscribed.

The Lake Shore Drive to be Extended South and Numerous Trees Planted.

An adjourned meeting of North Side property owners who are interested in the Lake Shore drive and other improvements, was held in a carpenter shop at the rear end of Superior street, yesterday afternoon. There were about sixty gentlemen present, and among them, W. K. Nixon, M. D. Ogden, A. C. Hesing, James L. Stark, George F. Bunsey, Mr. Turner, B. V. Page, Mr. Sprague, Mr. Goodwin, E. T. Culver, Mr. Chilson, Mr. Lill, W. A. Ewing, Mr. Taylor, J. H. Winston, Nathan Mears, E. Buckingham, and John A. Hoak. The object of the meeting was to hear the reports of the committees appointed at the previous meeting. Colonel Hammond was elected Chairman. After the minutes had been read and approved, Mr. Nixon read the following letter from Hon. William B. Ogden, dated Villa Bosco-bel, High Bridge, New York, July 18, 1872:

Messrs. Nixon, Kreigh, Hesing, Hunnewell, and others, Chicago:

GENTLEMEN: Your kind and courteous letter of the 13th, in relation to North Side improvements, and especially in relation to the extension south of our unequalled Lake Shore drive or boulevard, duly received from the bearer, our mutual and esteemed friend, Mr. Lill, and also the resolutions of your meeting of the same date, have been read and considered by me with much interest, and I had always supposed since the first, that such an extension and improvement would be made; but being much occupied here, and perhaps less acute in my thoughts and actions than heretofore, I had suffered the matter to rest in my own mind, thinking to give it attention when I went to Chicago, where I expected to be some time since. I am ready to join in such an extension of the shore drive south to Ohio or Indiana street, and in any improvements of it with grass and trees, as far south as can be done at an early day. I am ready to grant the right of way, not including the riparian right of the proper width through my blocks south of it, and will sell for use as a public work, if, of course, the city, and my mother and Mr. Sheldon upon questions of importance. I should be glad to see the boulevard pushed through this summer and autumn, and in time to enable us to plant large trees along it during the winter and spring. All our grand new avenues in this vicinity, of 100 to 120 feet wide, have one plain rolling carriage surface between the curb-stones on either side, except the Boulevard or boulevard, which is 120 feet wide, and has a width of grass and trees, through the center, some 25 to 30 feet or more wide, and so also have rows of trees along the curb-stones of each sidewalk. It has not advanced towards completion far enough to enable you to decide positively in regard to it, perhaps, but I should be inclined to think favorably of it along our windy, sandy lake shore. I shall soon be in Chicago now, however, when I will confer further with you in regard to this and other matters. Very truly yours, W. B. OGDEN.

Mr. Nixon stated that Mr. Ogden owned about one-half of the frontage where the proposed drive was to pass—from Indiana or Ohio street north to where Pine street runs into the lake. A plat of the ground had been prepared, showing the present water-line, and giving an idea of what was thought would be an acceptable line for the drive.

Mr. Lill said that, in accordance with the action taken at the other meeting, he had called on Mr. Ogden, who said he was willing and ready to help Chicago all he could. He would be here on the 10th of August, and Mr. Lill thought it would be better to defer fixing the line of the drive until he came. If it was decided to establish it, he had no doubt that Mr. Ogden would agree to it.

Mahlon D. Ogden asked if his brother had spoken of the line as going out or keeping on the present street.

Mr. Lill replied that he thought it would be better to keep it a little, as the accretion outside would in a few years make a considerable addition, and, in course of time, there might be enough room for another boulevard.

Mr. Gresley, civil engineer, then submitted a plan of the lake shore property, showing a projected line for the boulevard.

Mr. Goodwin, of the Committee to prepare articles of organization and recommend officers, reported, in substance, as follows: The object of the Association did not fully appear in what Mr. Ogden had written. It was not only intended to construct a drive from Pine street south to Indiana or Ohio street, but also to watch Lincoln Park Commissioners in commencing the construction of a driveway north to Lincoln Park. The Commissioners had not, as was known, command the means to do it; but, if they were loaned $10,000, they would reimburse the Association next year. The name of the Association was to be the "North Side Improvement Association," and one of the objects, in addition to those he had mentioned, was to watch trees generally on the North Side. The capital stock was to be $10,000, divided into shares of $100 each, which may be increased by a vote of the Executive Committee. The President makes all contracts for labor; and nothing can be ordered done until the money for it is in the treasury. The Treasurer can only pay out money on the order of the President, or the Chairman of the Executive Committee. The report was then moved by a majority of the stock, each share being entitled to one vote. A regular meeting of the Association is to be held once a month.

The Committee further reported a form of subscription, and an agreement in reference to planting trees. The latter requires all who sign it to plant one tree on every sixty feet of street front they own, by the 1st of April next, or to pay a reasonable sum to any one who does it for them.

Mr. Stark said it would be easy to raise $30,000 in a week, and commence the construction of the drive and the purchasing of trees at once. He believed 10,000 trees could be set out between the river and Fourth ward next year, extending as far west as was desirable. Property would be enhanced by it, and the North Side would again become a portion of the city. A road, he also proposed to set out the trees this coming autumn and winter.

Mr. Ogden inquired if any calculation had been made about the supposed cost of the drive, from Pine street south.

Mr. Stark said $20,000 would do a great deal towards it. Mr. Prindeville had said it would not; but the Committee had concluded that that sum would do much. Executive Committee could increase the capital if they thought proper. He thought $40,000 would do, as nothing would have to be bought of a small piece of property.

Mr. Turner asked what was the amount of legal liability of the laborer of stock.

Mr. Stark replied that they must pay what they subscribed for. He was not quite sure that they did not become in some degree liable if officers could expend only what money was given to them,—if they exceeded the amount, they alone were responsible.

The report of the Committee was accepted and unanimously adopted.

The Committee submitted the names of the following gentlemen for officers of the association:

President—William Lill.
Vice Presidents—E. H. Sheldon, A. C. Hesing, Henry W. King.
Secretary—Wilson K. Nixon.
Treasurer—George Stirgess.
Executive Committee—Nathan Mears, E. B. McGee, Wm. A. Ewing, F. S. Peabody, and F. H. Winston.

The report was unanimously adopted.

These present were then requested to subscribe for stock, and the gentlemen named agreed to take the amounts set opposite their names: F. H. Winston, $1,000; E. Buckingham, $1,000; George Sturges, $1,000; W. B. Ogden, $1,000; Ogden & Mears, $1,000; A. C. Hesing, $1,000; George F. Bunsey, $500; George E. Stanton, $200; C. A. Hoak, $500; W. K. Nixon, $200; W. A. Ewing and R. V. Page, $500; James L. Stark, $500; E. T. Culver, $500. Total, $9,000.

Mr. Culver stated that the Lincoln Park Commissioners had not accomplished any great things as yet, but looked forward to the time when they hoped to. They were desirous of taking such steps this season as would eventually secure all the territory for the park that the law allows them to petition. The assessment for the drive from Whitney street or Pine street to North avenue was now being collected. A portion of the money was already in the hands of the collectors, and the larger portion of it would be in a few weeks. If the citizens of the North Side knew all that was in the intention of Mr. Stark, and advance $10,000, his idea was to expend it at once in constructing a break-water to protect the driveway. One bid had already been made for a break-water fourteen feet wide at the bottom, fourteen feet high, and ten feet across at the top, which would cost his (Mr. Culver's) friend Mr. Kinsley not be done cheaper than that. It was proposed to construct it in such a way as to have every other alternate chamber for water and sand. The Commissioners had not as yet taken any steps as to what was to be done with the assessment which it was collected.

Mr. Hesing thought all the property it was intended to include in the Park should be purchased before the lake drive was completed.

Mr. Mahlon Town Supervisor, said he had refused to sign the bonds authorized by law to be issued by the Park Commissioners, because he had been unable to come to any understanding with the Commissioners. They did not seem to take any interest in the North Side; none of them lived there more; and he wanted one or two of them removed and wide-awake North Side men put in their places. He had been unable to find the bonds of the Commissioners.

Mr. Culver said the Commissioners had had them signed and deposited them with the Clerk of the Circuit Court before the first meeting of the Board.

Mr. Mahr was sure he did not have them in his possession.

Mr. Culver said that if they had been lost, new bonds would be filed.

Mr. Hesing inquired if it was the intention of the Park to buy all the property if the bonds were issued.

Mr. Culver replied that it was contemplated to secure all the property they could, if possible, by making an arrangement with the property-owners to pay a portion of the money now to secure the land, and the balance at some future time. The old cemetery would undoubtedly receive attention next.

The Pine Grove on the lake shore was alluded to, and it was stated that Dr. Rauch had promised to remove it before next summer. It is to be located on the new Baldwin grounds.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE CITY IN BRIEF.

A Fearful Scene.

A large congregation had assembled. The saloon was full. The mugs of beer foamed at the mouth. Pretzels were being put out of sight; so was sweitzer kase. Eating, and drinking, and merry-making men were in full blast. It was a jolly, good-natured, generous crowd. The beer flowed faster and faster, as they ground through the path of pleasure. Everything was as merry as a miniature Court House bell tinkling on a fair horse. Suddenly a hotter, fiercer, more fiendish walked to the bar. He called for a glass of beer. He paid 1 cent. A tall, barbarous ruffian rising, all his brows from a shock of matted hair, with a long, grizzly blade. It shimmered in the gaslight. The man raised the glass to his lips, and in a moment the latter, terrible, of the Court House bell tinkling on a fair horse
